India Takes Dacca, Extends Ceasefire

From AP-Reuter

The Indian army triumphed on its eastern front today with the unconditional surrender of Pakistan's army in East Pakistan. Then the Indian government ordered its troops on the western front to stop fighting as of Friday night in a unilateral ceasefire.

Pakistan Vows to Fight On

The Indian cabinet's decision to call a pause in the Kashmir area was made despite a declaration by Pakistan's president that he would carry on the war with India until the "occupied areas are taken back."

In announcing the Indian government's decision, an official spokesman said:

"We have repeatedly declared that India has no territorial ambition.

"Now that Pakistani armed forces have surrendered in Bangla Desh, and Bangla Desh now is free, it is pointless in our view to continue the present conflict.

"Therefore in order to stop bloodshed and unnecessary loss of life, we have ordered our armed forces to cease fire everywhere on the western front, with effect from 2000 hours Indian standard time on Friday, Dec. 17, 1971."

India Seeks Reciprocation

"It is our earnest hope that there will be a corresponding immediate response from the government of Pakistan."

The time given is 8 p.m. local time, equivalent to 9:30 a.m. EST.

The eastern and western Pakistani fronts are separated by about 1,000 miles of Indian territory.

In the east, Indian soldiers marched victoriously into Dacca and Prime Minister Indira Gandhi said in New Delhi.

"Dacca is now the free capital of a free country."

It has been the provincial capital of the East wing of Pakistan refugees.

Mrs. Gandhi said refugees who had fled from East Pakistan to India were already returning to the area which India calls Bangla Desh, or Bengali nation.

The Pakistan president, Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan, apparently refusing to write off East Pakistan, broadcast his intention to put out, two weeks hence, a new constitution that he insisted would apply to "both the wings" of Pakistan.

Before New Delhi's announcement of its intention to cease fire in the west, an Indian spokesman had reported the biggest tank battle of the war as having taken place in that sector within the last 24 hours.

UN Appeal Brushed Aside

The cabinet's decision for the western ceasefire was immediately conveyed to Foreign Minister Swaran Singh, now at the United Nations.

Mrs. Gandhi had earlier brushed aside a UN General Assembly ceasefire appeal and had declared that India would "fight on until Bangla Desh is liberated." The announcement indicated she felt that her conditions for a ceasefire had been fulfilled.

Announcement of the eastern-front victory brought cheers in the New Delhi Parliament.

The victory came on the 12th day of fighting there. The prime minister said the surrender was signed in Dacca at 4:31 p.m. (6:01 a.m. EST) by Lt.-Gen. A. A. K. Niazi, commander of the estimated 80,000 Pakistani troops in the province.

The surrender was received by Lt.-Gen. J. S. Aurora, commander of India's eastern command, who flew to Dacca.

Surrender Terms Discussed

Niazi surrendered nearly 24 hours after India, having given him an ultimatum to quit, suspended bombing of the East Pakistani capital. A half-hour before the ultimatum expired, the Pakistani commander asked for an extension and for an Indian staff officer to go to Dacca to discuss the surrender. The Indians sent Maj.-Gen. J. F. R. Jacob, with instructions to give Niazi until 5 p.m. to give up. Aurora went to Dacca a few hours later.

Indian troops had entered Dacca at 10:48 a.m., Mrs. Gandhi told Parliament, and Maj.-Gen. Mohammed Jamshed of the 36th Pakistani Division surrendered to them.

"The Indian armed forces will not remain in Bangla Desh longer than they are needed," Mrs. Gandhi said. India's only aim was "to assist the people of Bangla Desh and the Mukti Bahini to end the reign of terror there." The Mukti Bahini are East Pakistan's fighters for independence.

She said Indian armed forces and the Mukti Bahini were under strict order to prevent reprisals "against the Pakistan army soldiers and the Razakars," the locally recruited home guards, branded as collaborators by the Mukti Bahini.

"We hope Shiek Mujibur

PEKING RAPS INDIA

HONG KONG (UPI) — Communist China today warned the Soviet Union and India in a formal statement that "he who plays with fire will be consumed with fire," the New China News Agency reported.

A few minutes later NCNA said Peking had lodged a "strong" protest with New Delhi against the intrusion of Indian armed personnel into Chinese territory. Observers recalled that similar charges preceded the 1962 Sino-Indian border war.

China has supported Pakistan while the Soviet Union has backed India in the fighting on the Indian subcontinent.

The formal statement denounced India for aggression against Pakistan and the Soviet Union for its "energetic support" of the military operations launched by the New Delhi government.

"It is precisely under their joint conspiracy that the subversion, interference and aggression against Pakistan have been intensified," the statement said.

In the later broadcast, NCNA said the protest note was delivered by the Chinese foreign ministry to the Indian embassy in Peking today.

It said Chinese border guards reported that two bands of seven Indian armed personnel crossed separately on the China-Sikkim boundary and intruded into Chinese territory for reconnassiance. The alleged intrusion occurred on Dec. 10.

Meanwhile The Times of India reported today the Soviet Union may be sending elements of its navy into the Bay of Bengal which borders East Pakistan.

"The Soviet move is obviously a response to the provocative U.S. action in sending out a task force of its seventh fleet into the area," the paper said.

"Should the United States insist on establishing a beachhead in Bangla Desh to rescue trapped West Pakistan troops and civilians, the outcome may be serious international tension."

Police Get Review On Gastown Charges

No Vancouver policemen will be charged with assault during the Aug. 7 Gastown riot until the provincial attorney-general's department examines the matter.

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson said today he has called for a review of information and evidence gathered against five unnamed Vancouver policemen whom that city's prosecutor Stewart McMorran said would be charged with assault.

Peterson said he ordered the review as chief law enforcement officer in the province. It will be undertaken by his department.

He said he has notified the B.C. Federation of Peace Officers of his decision. The move follows a request by the Vancouver police union that the charges be dropped. Vancouver Mayor Tom Campbell also has said he is opposed to charging the policemen.

'SAME LAWS'

In announcing the review, Peterson said he has rejected an argument that charging the police would place them in triple jeopardy. The argument says the police face triple jeopardy from criminal and civil charges as well as disciplinary action within the force.

"Our police are subject to the same laws as anybody else," Peterson said.

But, he added, it would be dangerous for the police to feel that the next time a riot occurs they "wouldn't lift a finger" because of the threat of being charged.

TRANSFERS

The attorney-general pointed out that provincial Supreme Court Justice T. A. Dohm's inquiry into the riot did not say charges should be laid and suggested some officers might be transferred to other kinds of duty.

"It may be that the most serious action, the one that would be the most effective in this case," Peterson said, "would be discipline within the force itself."

He added he is always concerned about the morale of police forces. Even if criminal charges are laid, it would not be a "blanket condemnation of the police force," he said.

CONFIDENCE

"I have a great deal of confidence, admiration and respect for the Vancouver police force. In my book they compare in quality with any police force in the country or the world."

The city prosecutor's statement of intention to lay charges was given to the Vancouver Police Commission Dec. 3. The commission then decided to proceed with charges. Mayor Campbell said on Dec. 9 that he was the only member of the commission voting not to lay charges.

Campbell said doing so would hurt police morale. He said the matter should be left up to police chief John Fisk.

Peterson did not say when he would make a decision based on the review.

Surcharge Lifting Part of Package

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The treasury department today said the lifting of the 10-per-cent additional levy on dutiable imports will only take place as part of an international package agreement.

The treasury was commenting on a statement today by French Finance Minister Valery Giscard d'Estaing in Paris that the surcharge would come off the moment a realignment of currency parities is agreed upon.

The U.S. statement indicated the surcharge and other fiscal measures aimed at correcting a U.S. trade imbalance will only be abolished after the leading industrial nations agree on a general economic settlement, including a reform of trade relations and a redistribution of international defence costs, as well as currency realignment.

The deputy finance ministers from 10 leading non-Communist industrial nations meet here today to put together an agenda for their ministers in talks beginning Friday.

The Canadian delegation which arrived here Wednesday night included not only Deputy Finance Minister S. S. Reisman, but also, unexpectedly, Deputy Trade Minister James Grandy.

Finance Minister E. J. Benson and Louis Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, are expected later today.

Frigid Relief

EDMONTON (CP) — It was warming up today for Albertans who never had it so cold Wednesday.

The weather office said temperatures were heading for a relatively balmy zero, after plunging to record lows for Dec. 15 at eight locations.

The cold—it was 44 below at Edmonton international airport Wednesday night—slipped into Saskatchewan today, but the chief forecaster said the Arctic air mass had weakened and Saskatchewan would not get quite as frigid as Alberta.

At 7 a.m. it was 33 below at Prince Albert and Saskatoon, 22 below at Regina and 19 below at Moose Jaw.

Records for cold were shattered Wednesday at Fort Nelson, B.C., Edmonton international airport, Vermilion, Grande Prairie, Peace River, Fort Chipewyan and Whitecourt and equalled at Brooks and Red Deer.

Fort Nelson reported 47 below, the coldest day in December since the British Columbia community 475 miles northwest of Edmonton started keeping records in 1941. The previous December low was 46 below in 1951.

Few Flights Delayed

TORONTO (CP)—A work-to-rule campaign by Air Canada ground employees caused flight delays at Toronto International Airport today, but elsewhere across the country no major disruption was reported.

An Air Canada spokesman said there were long line-ups at Toronto ticket counters and flight delays were averaging 15 minutes. Part of the problem was attributed to a passenger backlog from a heavy rain and wind storm Wednesday.

Thirty-five of 100 flights were cancelled Wednesday at Toronto and schedules were also disrupted at Montreal because of the storm. One 747 jumbo jet from Miami was diverted to Toronto from Montreal because of ice and freezing rain.

Authority Lacking For Review Board

By PETER McNELLY
Times Staff

Health Minister Ralph Loffmark's new medical review board does not have the power to regulate surgical priorities as the minister had predicted it would Monday.

And Loffmark does not yet appear to have solved the difficult problem of effecting a redistribution of doctors in B.C. but he has given himself power to hand-pick an advisory committee to help solve the problem.

This is the picture which emerged Wednesday following release of Monday's cabinet order outlining the responsibilities of the three medical boards Loffmark announced earlier this week.

REVIEW BOARD

The minister had indicated a medical review board would deal with priorities and procedures a hospital doing open heart surgery and other specialized practices on a province-wide basis.

He also said Monday the board would be responsible for such things as "how patients shall be handled in the wards and anything else that relates to the management of these wards."

He said the government would ask the board to "advise on what basis patients should be admitted."

No such powers are granted to the board in Wednesday's batch of cabinet orders. The order merely says the review board "shall make recommendations . . . concerning both individual cases and general policy respecting the granting, refusing, or cancelling of a permit to practise medicine in a hospital, or respecting voting rights. . . ."

A highly-placed official in the B.C. Hospital Insurance Service Wednesday refused to explain why the order did not go further in the area Loffmark outlined Monday.

SAME AS DRAFT

He said the wording of the order appeared to be the way he had seen it in draft form but referred further questions

STANFIELD PLEDGES BRAS FOR BRA-LESS

Times News Service

OTTAWA — In an outstanding act of Christmas charity, the New Democrats allowed Conservative leader Robert Stanfield to steal the show Wednesday night at the NDP Christmas party.

The NDP used Stanfield — in person — as the climax to a funny and risque skit on King Arthur and the round table.

Arthur was former NDP leader Tommy Douglas, whose wife Guinevere proved to be unfaithful.

When Arthur took Guinevere to task for being an adultress, she rejected him as a male chauvinist.

In marched Sir Stanfield, who said: "I want to make one thing perfectly clear. The Conservative Party has always stood for help for the helpless, hope for the hopeless and bras for the bra-less.

"Good Guinevere, I'm going to take you away from all this. No more sanctimony and no self-righteousness."

At which time Sir Stanfield, saying Guinevere should sweep British Columbia and Quebec, swept Guinevere away — bra-less.

Ulster Defeatism Irks Protestants

BELFAST (AP) — Anger and frustration were reported swelling among Northern Ireland's Protestant majority today over a British admission there is little hope of a complete military solution to the violence which has tormented Ulster for more than two years.

And as if to underscore the gloomy forecast, guerrilla gunmen early today severely wounded another British soldier on patrol in Belfast, adding to the two already in danger of losing their lives from gunfire Wednesday.

British Home Secretary Reginald Maudling, who holds cabinet responsibility for Northern Ireland, shocked Protestants Wednesday when he told reporters it was likely the terrorists "would not be defeated, not completely eliminated, but have their violence reduced to an acceptable level."

The battle being fought by 14,000 British troops against the Irish Republican Army is a hard one, he said, and there appears to be no limit "to the evil these men can do."

Maudling's statement, made after two days of intensive talks in Northern Ireland with army and government chiefs, drew a swift retort from Rev. Ian Paisley, a hardliner who speaks for a powerful body of Protestants.

He said no level of violence would be acceptable to the people of Northern Ireland.

They would be "even more frustrated by this public declaration that it is not the intention of the British government to absolutely win the battle against the IRA," he said.

Paisley demanded an emergency debate in the Northern Ireland Parliament over the issue, while fears rose that Maudling's admission could spark a violent Protestant reaction once its implications of never-ending strife struck home.

The IRA's bomb-and-bullet terror campaign, which has brought 197 violent deaths in 28 months, is aimed at bringing Northern Ireland under the rule of the Irish Republic. The North's one million Protestants —who outnumber Roman Catholics two to one— are implacably opposed to union with the overwhelmingly Catholic republic.

Census Does Double Take on Marijuana

OTTAWA (CP) — When the first farmer's census form listing marijuana as a cash crop came in, census officials smiled.

After several more, they began looking at one another with raised eyebrows.

Finally, the census bureau sent inspectors out to the fields and found the farmers were telling the truth—marijuana has become a major cash crop for some farmers, representing all age groups, in several provinces.

Because of census rules, officials cannot release any statistics or name the provinces.

More importantly—as far as the farmers are concerned—the officials can't pass on the names of marijuana-growers to the RCMP.

A Statistics Canada spokesman said today that statistics on the acreage devoted to marijuana and the crop's cash value will not be reported separately, but will be lumped in with "other crops" in figures to be released sometime after March.

If province-by-province figures for marijuana were given, the spokesman said, "by a process of deduction individuals could be identified."

By law, census officials cannot release information that could be tied to any one individual or company.

But they confirm that marijuana was the major source of income for some Canadian farmers last year. An ounce of the illegal substance can sell for as much as $20 on the retail level.

The acreage devoted to marijuana on a national basis is minuscule, but officials indicated it is larger than such pharmaceutical crops as digitalis, which comes from the foxglove plant.

When RCMP raids on seizures of several marijuana harvests were reported recently, Statistics Canada officials checked and—to their relief—found that "it wasn't any of ours."

Census officials couldn't help but be pleased at one aspect of the situation.

"Some of our employees were amazed at the degree of trust" given census-takers and the census bureau, one official said.

A spokesman for the taxation department heard the news with interest.

"We're not aware that any farmers have reported that they are deriving income from marijuana," the tax man said.

If the farmers involved did report their income from marijuana, they would be protected by law from having their return statements passed on to the police.

Pacific Northern Set To Bid on Island Link

VANCOUVER (CP) — Pacific Northern Gas Ltd. will seek permission to build the entire gas transmission line from Williams Lake to Vancouver Island, company president Ron Rutherford said Wednesday.

The company, which is controlled by Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd., earlier had decided to apply to the Public Utilities Commission for permission to build that portion of the line from Williams Lake to Powell River, on the mainland coast.

Under guidelines originally established by Premier Bennett, U.S.-controlled companies such as Westcoast were forbidden from bidding on the contract to lay pipe to the Island from the mainland.

But Bennett later relaxed the requirements opening the way for Westcoast to enter a bid through Pacific Northern.

Westcoast president Kelly Gibson said he was delighted his company could apply. Although Westcoast would supply gas to whoever wins the contract for the line to the Island, it also would like to have "a part of the vehicle that moves it."

Pacific Northern now serves north-central B.C. from a Summit Lake connection on parent Westcost's main line.

At least six companies now are expected to bid on the contract, including Malaspina Gas Pipeline Ltd., which originally was named by Bennett to do the job.

to Loffmark. The minister is in Ottawa today attending a provincial health ministers conference.

He has been unavailable all week, except to make Monday's announcement.

The order also says Loffmark may establish a medical manpower committee to advise him on "all matters respecting the over-all medical manpower needs of the province and the geographic distribution of duly qualified medical practitioners throughout the province."

This leaves the final problem of doctor's redistribution in Loffmark's hands, but the new order wipes out the distribution powers the minister received last summer by another cabinet order, the one which touched off a bitter dispute with the medical profession.

FURTHER ORDERS

The official said the situation might call for further cabinet orders spelling out Loffmark's powers to act on the advice of the new board.

Other solutions could be the issue of limited permits to practise medicine, restricted geographically, or the use of financial incentives, he said.

INCENTIVES

Loffmark first mentioned the possibility of incentives Oct. 1 when he unveiled the first outline of the revised order which was not passed until this week.

Despite unanswered questions about the boards' powers, Loffmark clearly will be able to create the kind of medical manpower committee he wants.

Rules for committee appointments say Loffmark shall name seven members; three on the recommendation of the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and the B.C. Medical Association; three directly appointed by the minister (two of whom shall be doctors) and one, the chairman, appointed on the recommendation of the other two groups.

The medical review board will have five members, three of whom shall be nominated by the college, the BCMA and the B.C. Hospitals Association. The other two will be appointed directly by Loffmark and one of these shall be a doctor.

The third board is the medical appeal board. It also will have five members, appointed in the same manner as the medical review board. The appeal board has final and binding power to rule on cases where doctors dispute hospital boards' rulings on their hospital privileges.

According to Wednesday's cabinet order, Loffmark must create the medical appeal board but he is not required to create the medical review board or the manpower committee.

World Leaders Failed East Pakistan — India

NEW DELHI (AP) — Prime Minister Indira Gandhi has told President Nixon that if the United States and other states would have used their influence to release Sheik Mujibur Rahman the India-Pakistan war could have been avoided.

The sheik is the East Pakistani leader arrested in Dacca last march on treason charges and is in prison in West Pakistan.

"Instead we were told that a civilian administration was being installed" in East Pakistan, she said in a letter sent Wednesday and released by the government today. "Everyone knows this civilian administration was a farce."

Mrs. Gandhi rejected the Nixon administration's charge that India was largely to blame for the war.

She said the conflict could have been avoided "if during the nine months prior to the Pakistan attack on us on Dec. 3, the great leaders of the world had paid some attention to the face of revolt, tried to see the reality of the situation and searched for genuine basis for reconciliation."

"It was heart-breaking to find that while there was sympathy for the poor refugees, the disease itself was ignored."

She referred to the nearly 10 million East Pakistani refugees who fled to India after the Pakistan government began suppressing the independence movement last March.

Concerning Sheik Mujib, the prime minister wrote: "There was not even a whisper that anyone from the outside world had tried to have contact with him."

Mujib was the leader of the Awami League, which gained a majority of seats in last December's elections for a National Assembly, paving the way for him to become prime minister of all Pakistan. Instead, President Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan of Pakistan voided the election.

. . . PAKISTAN SURRENDER

Rahman will take his rightful place and lead the Bangla Desh people to peace, progress and prosperity," she said. Sheik Mujib, leader of the outlawed Awami League, has been in a West Pakistani prison since March 26 after his arrest in Dacca on charges of treason.

Niazi, the Pakistani commander, had called for a ceasefire Wednesday after Indian forces began pounding Dacca with artillery and mortars. India's army chief of staff, Gen. Sam Manekshaw, said he would agree to a ceasefire only if the Pakistanis surrendered unconditionally.

PRESS HARD

Indian troops have been increasing the pressure on Dacca for the last week and a Pakistani capitulation has been considered only a matter of time for several days.

Once the fighting is over in East Pakistan, the next question is what happens on the West Pakistani front.

The Indians have said they have no territorial designs on West Pakistan but the only doubt is whether Pakistan's President Yahya Khan will agree to accept defeat in the East and leave it at that.

He was due to broadcast to his nation at 9:30 a.m. EST and he may make known his position at that time.

The dramatic events of the morning climaxed the Indian advance through East Pakistan which began on Dec. 4—the day after full-scale war broke out between India and Pakistan.

While the air attacks were halted temporarily, Indian ground troops maintained their relentless drive on the city of Dacca, pounding military targets with heavy artillery and mortars.

Foreign reporters with the Indian forces reported Wednesday that forward elements had crossed the Lakhya River six miles from Dacca and were meeting resistance. It said the Indian troops were preparing to link up two miles from the city for the final thrust.

Bengali peasants streamed to cheer the artillery guns going by and hailed Indian-Bangla Desh friendship as crows picked at bodies of collaborators executed by the villagers.

The artillery and mortar barrage—backed up by air strikes until 5 p.m. Wednesday when the temporary bombing halt was called—was also being directed against civilian areas of the city where intelligence reports said Pakistani troops had dug in, the spokesman said.

He added that he hoped the civilian poyulation had been evacuated.

The neutral zone, which comprises the Intercontinental Hotel and the nearby Holy Family Hospital, would not be attacked, he emphasized.

But in New Delhi, a government spokesman said the Pakistanis had set up a post to direct artillery fire on top of the 11-storey Intercontinental, which has been marked with a Red Cross.

The East Pakistan command headquarters had been set up in buildings of Dacca University and air force headquarters established in a tuberculosis hospital, the New Delhi spokesman said.

And reports from the Indian air force said the Pakistanis had tied civilians on top of five bunkers in an area north of the city to deter Indian attacks.

Other Indian units were within three miles of the northern part of Chittagong, East Pakistan's major port which has been under heavy attack from both air and sea for several days.

On the western front, a Pakistani attempt to drive into Kashmir appeared to be bogged down several miles inside the border.

Hospital Board Raps Loffmark

The chairman of the Capital Region Hospital Board has told Health Minister Ralph Loffmark, in effect: "Since you won't let us do our job, how about doing it yourself?"

The tactical switch came to light at the regional hospital board meeting Wednesday, in the final paragraph of a letter chairman James Cumming wrote to Loffmark 10 days ago on a hospital land deal.

The move is born of the board's frustration over months of delays occasioned by a string of government stipulations on hospital projects regional directors are trying to get off the ground.

Latest is the attempted purchase of 35 acres on Helmcken Road near the Trans-Canada Highway for a 225-bed extended care hospital and possibly an acute care hospital in the distant future.

Loffmark complained the price at $6,500 an acre, the board negotiated with owner N. D. Cameron was too high and to try again.

He suggested because the property is farmland it is worth only $2,500 an acre.

That was several months ago. Then an exchange of letters appeared to have resolved the problem through an understanding that the land value would be determined by an independent appraiser.

But the government introduced another stipulation covering the independent appraisal — independent, yes, but still valued as farmland.

The property owner, Cameron, has said he is willing to accept a current market value appraisal so long as the B.C. Hospital Insurance Service and the regional board agree to be bound by it too.

In a letter to Cumming last week he added:

"I cannot agree, however, to be bound by an appraisal subject to instructions by one of the interested parties which could result in an appraisal which would not reflect current market value for this property."

Cumming's letter to Loffmark Dec. 6 on the latest stipulation puts it this way:

"To illustrate my point, may I indicate the present site of Woodward's store on Douglas Street. When this land was purchased it contained a run-down brickyard and worn-out clay pit.

"It most certainly was not sold, purchased or valued on the basis of its clay pit value."

Elsewhere in the letter he tells Loffmark:

"As the year closes we seem to have made little progress on the acquisition of a site for these 225 extended-care beds. We have spent the past 12 months exploring and overcoming one minor obstacle after another."

In the final paragraph he expresses a view mooted for months by some regional board members who have run out of patience with what they see as unending delays by Loffmark.

"... May I again invoke your offer of the help of your department in procuring another site. I am sure I could persuade the Capital Regional Hospital District Board to accept any site which you and your staff could obtain and recommend under the terms which have been laid down."

Insulin Discoverer Companion of Honor

LONDON — Dr. Charles Best, 72-year-old co-discoverer of insulin, received one of Britain's most prized awards today, the Companion of Honor, in an unusually long private audience with the Queen. "It a wonderful honor," the Toronto-born scientist said as he emerged from Buckingham Palace carrying the little red box with the gold insignia and red ribbon of the CH, an exclusive order restricted to 65 living persons. Best, looking fit and ruddy-cheeked, said he had been in audience with the Queen for more than half an hour.

WATERLOO, Ont. — Pensioner Frederick Straus says old dogs should get the same sort of tax exemptions as old people. To prove his point, the 68-year-old man went to jail today rather than pay a $10 fine for failing to buy a tag for his 14-year-old dog, Bonnie. Straus told Judge Gordon McConnell he has paid $6.50 a year to the city of Waterloo for years to get Bonnie her annual tags. And now that Bonnie is pushing 15, he figures she should be pensioned off from the dog-tag system. He told the judge he is through buying dogtags and wouldn't pay the fine either. "I'll serve a jail term before I pay one dollar."

BEST
... honored by Queen.

OTTAWA — Prime Minister and Mrs. Trudeau made a rare public appearance Wednesday night and went home with a little something for their baby, expected almost anytime. Attending the Christmas party for Liberal workers — and others with $5 admission tickets — in the West Block of Parliament, they were given 60 disposable diapers by Santa Clause — Labor Minister Bryce Mackasey. Trudeau also was given a record album of the songs from Hair, even though he showed up with his flowing locks trimmed about an ich.

PHILADELPHIA — An army civilian employee who spent nearly half of his 19 years in a Communist Chinese prison in solitary said Wednesday he was generally well treated by his captors but that the loneliness had left its mark. "I was alone so long," said Richard Fecteau, 43, of Lynn, Mass., his voice almost inaudible, who was released Monday in Hong Kong. "I was in solitary the first three years and the last five or six years," in a prison in Peking. A doctor described Fecteau as withdrawn and cautious. Otherwise, the former college football star appeared in good health.

VANCOUVER — Former Assistant City Prosecutor James Edward Wilson was sentenced Wednesday to five years in penitentiary for stealing $34,000 from the estate of Reginald E. Nalutka of Surrey. Judge Graham Darling said after Wilson was convicted by a county court jury that the theft was "blatant taking of money out of the trust account of an estate."

Judge Darling also ordered Wilson to make restitution of the money to Mrs. Reginald Nalutka. Wilson was acting as solicitor to Mrs. Nalutka when he stole the money from the estate.

NAPANEE, Ont. — Prison guards Grant Snider and Bernard Evans of Millhaven penitentiary were found not guilty by an Ontario Supreme Court jury Wednesday of assaulting prisoners from Kingston penitentiary. The 12-man jury deliberated for about 45 minutes before reporting its verdict to Judge Gerald Smith.

OTTAWA — British Prime Minister Edward Heath's visit to Ottawa Friday will be a quickie. He arrives at 12:15 p.m. EST and leaves at 7 p.m. Between arrival and departure, Heath will confer with Prime Minister Trudeau at a working lunch and post-lunch meeting at Trudeau's official residence, call on Governor-General Michener, and hold a press conference. After leaving Ottawa, Heath will go to Bermuda for a meeting with President Nixon.

HOLLYWOOD — After five years of relative idleness, ventriloquist Edgar Bergen has packed up his bag of dummies and will travel. "Yes, it was just about five years ago that I decided to retire," said Bergen. "For 20 years on radio I had written a new script every week and I thought I deserved a rest. I wanted to see what it was like on the other side. "Well, I found out. It's dull. I devoted myself to business matters and other things, but I found out I was bored. Show business is my marijuana, my bourbon. I can't seem to do without it."

STORES CHARGED

VANCOUVER (CP) — The Crown has charged Super Valu Stores Ltd., and Saba Bros Ltd., with violating the Combines Investigation Act by false advertising.

Super-Valu is alleged to have advertised a sale of a gallon of paint for $4.95. The containers of paint did not contain a full imperial gallon, the Crown alleges.

Saba Bros., a clothing store, is alleged to have advertised a sale of undergarments at 20 per cent off, when the price charged was not 20 per cent less than the regular price.

Official Stipend Really $1,000

As vice-chairman of the Capital Region District Board and chairman of the region's hospital board, North Saanich Mayor Jim Cumming has been paid $1,000, not $1,500 as reported in Tuesday's Times.

The erroneous information was supplied by a district official.

B.C. PAUSES ... TILL 2049

VANCOUVER (CP) — After four province-wide centennial celebrations in the last 13 years, British Columbians can take a breather.

The next chance for a B.C. centennial, says Lawrie Wallace, deputy provincial secretary, will be in the year 2049 to mark the 200th anniversary of the founding of the colony of Vancouver Island.

Wallace, who headed planning for centennial celebrations in 1958, 1966, 1967 and this year's observance of 100 years in confederation, said the 10th anniversary of the birth of the Island colony was not celebrated in 1949 because it fell too close to the end of the Second World War.

But there still will be cause for jubilation before the turn of the century. Various municipalities are approaching their 100th birthdays, the centennary of the arrival of the RCMP in the province is not many years off, and the 1980s will provide opportunities to mark the arrival of the first train and the driving of the last spike in the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Parks: An Uphill Struggle

The record of the provincial government is good in establishing relatively small parks — usually public camping areas centred on some attractive feature such as a lake, waterfall, river or, more rarely, sea front. But its record in saving or creating large wilderness parks — the real payoff properties by which posterity will judge our stewardship — is correspondingly poor.

In the public view, new acquisitions have been only at the expense of existing parklands, and usually at very poor bargains. The government seems to be determined that a balance shall be kept so that there shall be no gain in the public's holdings of the large treed areas which in times to come will be the outdoor museums to show what Canada used to be like.

A recent illustration of this philosophy was Recreation Minister Kiernan's deal by which a private logging company traded its holdings at Cape Scott, on the northern tip of Vancouver Island, for logging rights in Strathcona Park in the Island's centre. The "trade" involved the company's 576 acres, valued at $300,000, for which the Social Credit government handed over, in the name of the people, the right to cut park timber estimated to be worth more than $10 million.

It is true that the Cape Scott area will make an excellent waterfront wilderness park some day — when the government acquires still further hundreds of acres that will be necessary to round out the property. But the cost in terms of destruction of the existing Strathcona Park — a jewel set aside by the province long before Mr. Bennett appeared on the scene — is outrageous.

More recently, part of the province's contribution to the new national park at Long Beach, which involved acquisition of some 10,000 acres of treed land under licence to a logging company, was paid for by a grant to the company to log another 4,000 acres in Strathcona Park.

Today, various sections of the public — along with the federal government — are urging the provincial government to enlarge the provisions for the West Coast Trail parkland by widening the strip up to two miles and adding the area embracing the three lakes — Hobiton, Tsusiat and Squalicum Lakes — in the Nitinat Triangle. Mr. Kiernan and his department are reportedly looking at the problem, which from experience means they are studying what existing parkland they can trade for new parkland.

The irony of the situation lies in the fact that the logging company holdings are former public forest land turned over to the company for logging purposes under licence, which now have to be bought back or traded for when changing conditions have made part of the area more necessary for recreational purposes than for logging.

The question that arises is, how much further progress in parks acquisition can the province stand when each new gain is only at the expense of existing parkland — and apparently in the form of very one-sided bargains at that? Do we tear up a highway every time we build a new one, or demolish a usable hospital or school each time another is raised?

Then why such treatment of parks? Why, indeed, a 19th century attitude to wilderness parks in the 20th century, when large public outdoor recreational areas are increasingly recognized as the breathing spaces, the indispensable recuperative environments, for a harried mankind?

Depressing Reading

The statistics reported to the Commons the other day concerning repeaters committed to federal penitentiaries last year make depressing reading. More than 77 per cent of the 4,450 males sent to the penitentiaries had previously been committed to these or other correctional institutions.

That rate of failure suggests a change in the name. What is correctional about a system which does not correct three out of four people placed in its care?

The actual figures should be accompanied by an explanation of methods of release. Had these men completed the terms imposed upon them? Or had a substantial number been freed prematurely under a screening arrangement which appears to leave much to be desired?

The questions become more pointed as the crime rate, particularly in cases of violence, continues to rise. While a very large number of Canadians are prepared to place the emphasis on rehabilitation rather than punishment when offenders are found guilty, there comes a time when even the most generously inclined must wonder how well society is being protected.

When 77 per cent of those exposed to rehabilitative treatment fail to respond positively, the answer seems obvious: not very well at all. The screening, it seems, is conducted with too wide a mesh.

BRUCE HUTCHISON

Report From a Flying Saucer

After its recent tour of the solar system, the flying saucer from Outer Space returned to its home port with alarming news. As the captain of this expedition reported to the Grand Council, everything seemed to be normal on the other planets but mysterious events were under way on a speck of cosmic matter known as the Earth.

"The earthlings," said the captain, "are obviously up to something dangerous. They call it Christmas, an ancient festival of religion, peace and goodwill. Or so they say. But that didn't fool us for a moment when most of their energies are devoted to military preparations, which they can well afford.

"They're so rich, in fact, that two of their most affluent states on a continent called Asia are celebrating Christmas with a major war to demonstrate their superiority over the corrupt and decadent states of the West."

"This doesn't make much sense," the president of the council remarked.

"Not to us spacemen, perhaps," said the captain, "but unfortunately our civilization and thought processes lag far behind those of the earth. No, some subtle logic is at work, beyond our understanding. We could guess that much from the earthlings' secret password.

The Un-Merry Wish

"Everywhere we went they were muttering over and over again two sinister words that sounded like Merry Christmas. But since we could find no one who was in the least merry, except a few Eskimos in their houses of ice, we realized at once that the password had another meaning which we couldn't decipher."

"Ah, that's indeed sinister," the president agreed.

"Yes and something else puzzled us," the captain admitted. "All the earthlings told us that Christmas had once been a season of simple pleasure, even a mystical idea, with certain quaint, rather charming legends. They actually used to enjoy it, but all that has changed. Christmas, they said, has become a vast commercial transaction, a competition in the exchange of ever more expensive gifts, a pagan status symbol, enjoyed only by small children.

"This explanation, too, is clearly a subterfuge to fool us. No sane living creature could be as prodigal, discontented and desperate as the earthlings pretend to be in their weird feast of the winter solstice."

"Possibly," the president suggested, "they're crazy."

"We thought of that," the captain replied, "but it won't do. Madness on such a scale, and at such financial cost, is impossible. No, they're quite sane, perfectly governed, coldly realistic, strictly rational. They all said so.

"Take, for instance, their most popular myth. They pretend that the earth's natural wealth is being depleted by excessive use, over-population and pollution. If that were true why would they be using more resources, creating more earthlings, and spilling more poison into the air and ocean every day?

ESKIMO
the only one in the least merry . . .

"Why would they worship with such ardent enthusiasm and sincere faith their grim trinity of gods called the GNP, the Standard of Living and Economic Growth? We couldn't interpret these peculiar sacraments and the earthlings themselves didn't seem to understand them very well, either. So they tried to hide their confusion under the myth of an innocent-looking figure, with a false white beard, called Santa Claus. Everyone denies any belief in his existence but that also is a diabolically clever trick when the financial and economic policies of all their governments are based on the myth and carry the trade mark of Santa Claus."

"The thing is baffling," said the president.

"Or again," the captain went on, "how could anyone accept their pretence that the richest and most divided of their nations — oddly named the United States — is nearly bankrupt when its income rises statistically year after year and at Christmas there are three turkeys in every pot and a hangover in every household?

"Even more extraordinary is the situation next door in a nation called Canada. There the inhabitants have more natural resources and enjoy a more fortunate life than any people on the earth. Yet they complain of their grinding poverty, their government, their neighbors, their dismal future and themselves.

"And in a macabre native joke they bewail their lack of national identity though all the other earthlings envy their unique good luck and try to imitate it. This collective inferiority complex is designed, of course, to cloak some ominous strategy which the Canadians share among themselves.

Fiends Incarnate

"Why, even the sceptical Americans and their tough-minded leaders are deceived when the Canadian emperor promises that Canada will not invade and take over the United States. Those Canadians are fiends incarnate. We must watch them."

"I agree," said the president. "But how can we protect ourselves? The earthlings must have solved all the problems of their own planet or they wouldn't be shooting rockets, weapons and men into space, probing closer to our territory all the time. They wouldn't be spending such enormous sums of money if poverty or any other serious trouble existed on the earth. They wouldn't be saying Merry Christmas unless they had something to be merry about.

"It's quite obvious," the president concluded, "that they intend to conquer us. And when I hear that two members of their supposedly gentle, female sex are the earth's leading warriors, frankly I see no chance of escape."

"Well, we shall have a brief reprieve anyhow," said the captain. "The earthlings will be paralyzed, harmless and broke until they recover from their midwinter mania."

Give Them Shock Treatment

In one of his recent columns Jack Scott wrote of his visit to a Hippie "colony" in the Sooke area. He told of their tangled matted hair and beards, "their apparent contentment with living in filth," their "muted, passive just-sit-around murmuring attitude that, more than anything else, makes their culture not only a mystery but a fearful mystery to straight society."

He also referred to them as being in the naive state of mind "where the pursuit of independence and happiness is the rebel's cause," in which they justified their harboring of a dangerously sick 82-year-old man until Dr. Whitbread gave them a deliberately "harsh" lecture to shock them into recognition of their selfish idiocy.

There is no "mystery" in the attitude of these freaks. They have of their own free will consciously rejected the obligation implicit in the fact of their consciousness to respond responsibly to the problems and questions posed to them by life. Neither are they true "rebels," for implicit in rebellion is positive acceptance of a challenge, and not a "passive just-sit-around murmuring attitude." Nor are they "independent," but, rather, self-pitying slaves and conformists to mediocrity.

In short, these pathetic creatures are moral cowards who have anesthetized their consciences to the degree where they seek to justify their negation of responsibility by "murmuring" metaphysical inanities about their hypocritically-pretended "rejection of society." No one can reject society. These people are part of it. Therefore, paradoxical as it may seem to them, by their irresponsibility they are in fact only adding themselves to that element of ethical nihilism operative in other sectors of the society they profess to reject.

No greater service could be rendered to the victims of this Hippie fraud than to give them massive doses of the harsh shock treatment administered to those of the Sooke "colony" by Dr. Whitbread.—J. J. Zubick, 4982 William Head Rd.

Restore Emily's Birthplace

Glenn Howarth's story on Emily Carr (Times, Dec. 11) was interesting and informative and, but for one statement, would have been a timely fillip to the encouragement of public interest in the future of the birthplace of one of Canada's greatest artists.

I refer to his short-sighted criticism of the work of the Junior Chamber of Commerce whose dedicated and unselfish efforts have been responsible for the preservation of this national shrine despite the apathy and obstruction from City Hall. Mr. Howarth's statement that the Jaycees "have misspent their money" in restoring the house which "is a poor monument" is incredible at a time when Canada is beginning to realize that the preservation of its history and art is an integral part of being a great nation.

Our world would have been emptier had someone not thought of preserving the birthplace of William Shakespeare, Ann Hathaway's cottage, the House of Rembrandt and, in another vein, the Coliseum, a part of Hiroshima, the Great Wall of China, the House of Anne Frank — these are but a few places that continue to attract, impress and inform millions of people.

THE OLD CARR HOME

Mr. Howarth says the money spent by the Jaycees "would have been better directed toward bringing valued works back to the city." We already possess many, a large number are available to us, others can be obtained later; her birthplace cannot — it is now or never.

Let's get behind these young and energetic businessmen and insist that their efforts to preserve the birthplace of Victoria's Emily Carr be encouraged not only by our local and provincial governments but by Victorians themselves and ensure that the restoration is fully completed for the benefit of all Canadians, many of whom revere the work of this great artist much more than we seem to do.—Jerry Gosley, 522 Beach Drive.

Canadian Unions and Splinter Groups

We read of the American-based unions trying to recapture what they call the "splinter groups." These groups are Canadian unions that have broken away from the American unions for various reasons.

We read of the promises of Canadian autonomy, which is a lot of "hooey".

Most of the U.S. unions own everything of the Canadian locals, and I mean everything. In most cases they claim everything in the office: chairs, tables, typewriters, etc., and also every form of financial interest. The people of Smith Falls, Ontario, can verify what the Steelworkers union did for them.

Ask any prominent union officer when an American union held an International Convention in Canada.

Every form letter, all letter headings, every book of by-laws, all convention material, as buttons, caps, etc. are printed or manufactured in the States.

As a former union officer I suggest that all Canadian workers join their Canadian local; they can be just as effective in their efforts for good contracts.

It does not take an analyst to figure how many millions of dollars go into the coffers of the U.S. unions to support such people that dominate the unions.

Remember — the CIO was a splinter group once. Why did they break off? — The Observer.

Urgent Attention

FOREIGN AID IS NOT DOING 'COMPLETE JOB' — was the headline on the recent discourse on this subject by Mr. Paul Gerin-Lajoie, president of the Canadian International Development Agency. "It would be childish to deny the political or commercial motives of what we cal 'aid'," he adds.

It is for precisely this reason that I recommend a most scrupulous examination of the political nature of Canada's aid to Vietnam, as documented in the reports of Dr. Alje Vennema (former Director of Canadian Medical Services in South Vietnam), and myself.

I look forward to Mr. Gerin-Lajoie's support of the notices of motion presently leading the list on the order paper in parliament. These requests for publication of the two reports were entered by Mr. David MacDonald, MP, and Mrs. Grace MacInnis, MP, almost a year ago, but continue to be set aside each day.

With renewed interest on the part of CIDA, I am confident that the matter could receive the urgent attention to which it is entitled. — Claire Culhane, Montreal, P.Q.

Dry Balloting

The days of doing a deal by buying a drink for a vote went out with the nineteenth century. Long queues were lined up at the government liquor store where there was no civic election in Esquimalt.

As a founder president of a veterans' branch I object to the archaic law kept on the books by this government, which prevents a comrade orf anyone else fraternizing over a glass of beer. All because somebody wants to be mayor or alderman. The financial loss to our saloons and liquor outlets during voting for a whole twelve hours last Saturday is a disgraceful and damaging piece of nonsense that demands immediate rectification by removal of the law from the books. — Clarence Goode., 1840 St. Ann.

When Needed

Through you I wish to express my sincere appreciation for the promptness and efficiency of the Victoria Fire and Police Departments in answering my call of distress when my home was ablaze on the night of November 27.

Their kindness and courtesy is to be highly commended.

I also wish to express my heartfelt thanks and eternal gratitude to Randy L'Heureux, age 14, of 2211 Forbes, who aroused me and insisted on my leaving the smoke-filled house. — Anne E. Underwood, 1215 Pembroke St.

Negative Vote

The reason the Progressive-Conservatives are exuding such confidence on winning the next election is not because of Stanfield's capability, but because of Trudeau's incapability.

Also, is not Senator Keith Davies out of order in criticizing Pastor Paul Smith, of the People's Church, Toronto, for saying that he would vote for Hitler in preference to Trudeau if he had to choose between them? He was merely expressing a political preference, which all must do if we are to have free elections. — L. Pratt (Mrs.) Galt, Ont.

Ho Hum, We're Living in a 'Low Anxiety' Land

By BERNARD WEINRAUB
New York Times

LONDON — A British psychologist, analyzing the "Anxiety Level" of various nations, has found that Japan, West Germany and France are among the nations with the highest stress.

The countries showing the least anxiety include the United States, Canada, Britain and Ireland.

The psychologist, Dr. Richard Lynn, of the Economic and Social Research Institute in Dublin, has published his findings in a new book, "Personality and National Character," published by Pergamon Press. Lynn said that the book is the first analysis of national character using contemporary psychological methods.

Lynn, a 41-year-old Cambridge graduate, has studied the 18 countries with the highest per capita income, analyzing each country's rate of suicide, alcoholism, vehicle accidents, psychosis and caloric intake. "There are intercorrelations among the countries," Lynn said. "The single underlying factor is the level of anxiety."

In an interview during a recent London visit Lynn said: "There are certain myths about nations that these figures dispel. There's a belief, for example, that the Irish drink a lot of alcohol. Well, they drink very little alcohol compared to other countries such as Italy and Switzerland.

"People also believe that suicide rates are very high in Scandinavia," said Lynn. "The rates are not nearly as high as Austria and Japan."

He added: "Americans don't commit suicide in any large numbers. Nor do they drink very much. I don't think they're an especially neurotic group."

Lynn's high anxiety countries are: Japan, West Germany, Austria, Italy, France and Belgium.

The countries with moderate anxiety are: The Netherlands, Norway, Finland, Denmark, Switzerland and Sweden.

Low anxiety countries are: Australia, Canada, the United States, New Zealand, Britain and Ireland.

Lynn suggests in his book that race and climate are the chief factors responsible for a nation's anxiety level. He emphasizes, however, that the racial differences in anxiety are "not a thesis of racial superiority or inferiority."

Lynn based this finding on the view that countries with a mainly Mediterranean and Alpine population fall in the high anxiety area, while those in the low anxiety category are Nordic. The moderate group is mixed: Denmark and Sweden have substantial Alpine and Mediterranean strains, while the other four are mainly Nordic.

For his thesis, Lynn, who describes himself as a behaviorist rather than a follower of Freud, selected a series of symptoms, which he expected to be linked to anxiety, and for which reliable statistics were available. He said that he omitted the Soviet Union because detailed statistics were scarce.

Some of the findings are bound to be disputed. For example, Lynn concludes that high suicide rates and high alcoholic intake are indications of anxiety — but a high rate of chronic psychosis indicates a low anxiety level. (Ireland has an exceptionally high rate of mental illness.)

"The symptoms of chronic psychosis are apathy, despair, lack of energy," said Lynn in the interview. "These are psychological states related to low anxiety."

Freudian analysts would disagree, saying that psychosis is directly tied to anxiety. Some Freudians would also insist that high caloric intake or overeating is also linked to anxiety. Lynn maintains, however, that anxiety often inhibits the appetite so that low caloric intake and tension are linked.

Lynn insists climate is a significant factor in anxiety. "There seems to be some tendency for the high-anxiety countries to have somewhat warmer climates," he says. "One possibility is that heat acts as a stress and thereby has the effect, like other stressful stimuli, of inducing anxiety."

They Weren't On the Same Wave-Length

By PETER DESBARATS

NDP leader David Lewis was dead right when he said last week that it would be "humiliating" for Canada to ask the United States for permission to exist as an independent nation. But that is not what Prime Minister Trudeau asked President Nixon in Washington.

Lewis and other commentators seem to have misunderstood the question that was put by the prime minister.

It is very likely that President Nixon also misunderstood it. If he did, last week's euphoria about Canadian-American relations will be short-lived.

Trudeau did not ask Nixon if the United States will respect Canada's economic, political and cultural independence. That, indeed, would have been a naive question; and Trudeau's excitement over an affirmative answer, at his press conference in Washington, would have been even more inane.

The Canadian prime minister in fact asked the president of the United States if he intends to alter the nature of world capitalism.

If the president's "yes" was given with full understanding of the question, then Trudeau's excitement over the answer is understandable. But it is almost impossible to believe that Nixon really understood what Trudeau was driving at.

Simple Question

It is more probable that the question and answer were transmitted on entirely different frequencies, each leader using a wave-length that the other was not equipped to receive.

There was no secret about Trudeau's primary mission in Washington. It was not to negotiate details of trade and currency arrangements. It was to get Nixon's answer to an apparently simple question. the question was clearly explained by the prime minister in an interview at the end of October with Charles Lynch, Chief of Southam News Services.

This is what the prime minister said:

"We want an answer to this: Are you saying that you will continue to want to receive from Canada and indeed from all the world, interest and dividends coming back into the United States every year, and not let the rest of the world and Canada pay for that by selling more goods to you?

"Therefore you are saying that you must export long-term American capital to all countries of the world?

"In other words, are you saying that your economic system is leading you to try and buy up as much of the world as possible?

Marxist Theory

"I don't think they have thought this through," continued Trudeau. "You know this is real Marxist theory about imperialism being the last phase of capitalism."

Later in the interview, he returned to this idea:

"I think we're forcing them to come to grips with that problem. I don't think that they would admit that they are behaving as capitalists the way the Marxists say that they are behaving.

"I remember a book 25 years ago, by Paul Sweezy, called 'Imperialism, The Last Stage of Capitalism', and I don't think the Americans would want to say they are doing that."

No one at the time picked up this curious reference.

Who is Paul Sweezy?

He is the editor of the "Montfily Review", an "Independent Socialist Magazine" according to its own masthead, publishing out of New York. Last winter I interviewed Paul Sweezy when he travelled to Montreal as the publisher of the U.S. edition of Pierre Vallieres' "The White Niggers of America." In the November 1971 issue of Monthly Review, Sweezy's writings include the report that "all indications are that the situation in Quebec is ripe for fruitful political work."

Although you won't find him in the American Who's Who, Sweezy is a fixture of the American left. He was the original U.S. publisher of "Revolution In Revolution", the book written by the young French philosopher Regis Debray who was imprisoned in Bolivia for his association with guerrillas led by Che Guevara. A recent book co-authored by Sweezy in 1966 — "Monopoly Capital — An Essay On The American Economic And Social Order" — was dedicated to Che Guevara.

Published in '42

The book that the prime minister referred to last October is probably Sweezy's "Theory of Capitalist Development — Principles of Marxian Political Economy" published by Oxford University Press in New York in 1942.

Trudeau's recollection of the title probably stems from a sentence near the end of the book, when Sweezy wrote: "We have, in short, surveyed the emergence of those features of the latest stage of capitalist development which led Lenin to give it the name imperialism."

Imperialist Policy

Sweezy's book makes the following points:

- "Capital export makes for an imperialist policy."
- "The annexationist urge of imperialist nations is by no means confined to backward, non-industrialized nations."
- Monopoly capital in the United States "gives an impetus to capital exports which often takes the form of direct investment, that is to say, the establishment of branch factories in foreign countries.
- "The basic internal contradiction of capitalist production drives to external expansion and conflict."

It was this Marxist interpretation of United States development that Prime Minister Trudeau presumably placed before Richard Nixon last week — whether Nixon realized it or not.

"In this particular crunch, following from the Nixon measures," said Trudeau last October, "I think we have a very good test case of asking them that exact question, and getting them, I hope, to think through their answer."

If President Nixon really understood the question, his positive response to the prime minister is indeed a breakthrough on many fronts, intellectual as well as economic and political.

But if by any chance Nixon has never heard of Paul M. Sweezy, there is a need to look warily at what Trudeau described as "A fantastically new statement in the mouth of a president of the United States."

Painted for Power

By BOB HUNTER
The Sun

The female chauvinist pig is everywhere.

One sees her in offices, on buses, in cars, airplanes, flouncing along the street in her outrageous costumes with paint all over her face. Not a few of these female sexists are indistinguishable from a drag queen.

As much as the rise of the lesbian philosophy has tended to put the boots to the notion that the female cannot function without a man at her side, so has the rise of Gay Liberation kicked the hell out of the idea that a man is lost without a woman.

My own experience is that the richest combination of psyches is the heterosexual kind of bond — but the social function of the emergence of homosexuality from the basement has been to at least shake the fortress of assumptions that guide the heterosexual. Yes, no doubt there are other vital ways of human bonding.

But the point is that females in paint and costume are at least as gross and glossy as circus clowns. Why do they have all that crap on their faces? Why do they bother to put on giddy outfits whose sole function seems to be stimulation of the opposite sex?

The answer is complex. Germaine Greer, Kate Millet, et all, have amply explored its sorry depths. They attribute it mainly to brainwashing and conditioning. It is also something of a survival tactic. Barred from the corridors of power, women are forced for the most part to make it as prostitutes. Marriage, perhaps as often as not, is at some level a form of legalized prostitution.

Yet there is another dimension which the women have not been so eager to explore. And this is the dimension of female contempt for males.

In their choice of "sexy" outfits, of make-up and general posture and manner of walking, female chauvinist pigs persistently relate to men as though we were all dumb, panting brutes to be herded down the chute like cattle.

A whiff of perfume, a flash of cleavage, a pink splash of thigh . . . and just like that we are supposed to start slobbering at the mouth.

Third of a Series

Only a female who had the lowest possible estimation of men could behave that way.

This may come as a shock to those female pigs out there in their hot pants and false eyelashes and wigs and perfume, but not all males are so easily turned on.

Whether you choose to believe it or not, there are not a few of us who are interested finally in whether the female person before us can think, talk, have feelings, communicate, share a variety of experiences other than orgasm. We would prefer to deal with human beings, not life-sized Barbie Dolls.

I am not denying for a moment the force of those social pressures which make such a mess of the female ego that it has to cloak itself in peek-a-boo and uplift bras and fingernail polish. It is a tragedy, without doubt. Yet it is a tragedy with other sides to it. For if women are driven by intolerable conditions to behave this way, it nonetheless remains true that they do it in some part— perhaps a large part — because they tend to look upon men as dull hulks in a perpetual state of heat.

I am at the stage now where I am ready to yell "pig" at the woman who comes on to me with her grotesque parody of female sexuality.

While it is without doubt true that men are conditioned to think of women at times as "sex objects," it is no less true that women get into the deadly habit of thinking of men as "sex machines" — to be turned on and off at the flip of a breast. In this way, men are dehumanized and brutalized by woman almost as much as women are eviscerated and reduced to a doll-like trance by men.

The old gambit of titillating men is essentially an exercise in control and power. I cannot buy the argument — put forward by Millett — that the reins of power are all in the hands of males. Manipulation is often the most effective means of control. Actual power in our society often enough goes to the manipulator. And to the extent that woman have all but cornered the market on manipulation in sexual relations, it is in their hands that a parallel and often overlapping power structure rests.

A World of Non-Problems

RUSSELL BAKER

It is interesting to turn on the set periodically to see what problems are bothering the people who live in television commercials. It is not a bad place to live in — television commercials, that is — if you can tolerate the sudden appearances in your home of those humorless, faintly menacing strangers who pop in and out with problem-solving consumer goods.

The problems people have in television commercials, of course, bear no relationship to what you and I call problems. Indeed, one occasionally gets the suspicion that people who live in television commercials are so short of problems that they have to invent them.

Could it be that they envy us, out here in the real world? That they want so much to be like us that they sit around inside the tube trying to think up problems that will give them something in common with us?

If so, they are making a sad botch of it. Among men who live in television commercials, for example, there is an unshakeable conviction that the greatest problem in the United States today is shaving.

Where did they ever get the idea that shaving is an ordeal? For more than 20 years they have been turning up there in their little bathrooms, every time the set lights up, groaning and gasping about the toughness of their beards, the inadequacy of their lather, the inefficiency of their razors, all apparently on the assumption that shaving is the great American male trauma.

★ ★ ★

How can we get through to them with the message that shaving is actually one of the day's better moments?

For the vain, it affords a valid excuse for close study of a favorite face. For practically everybody, it requires just enough concentration on a small task to distract the mind from its real worries — that high blood pressure, for example, or the possibility that all three of your children may fail algebra simultaneously this semester . . .

People who live in television commercials never seem to have high blood pressure. Physically, their problems are negligible. Their gravest infirmity — the television equivalent to the real life doctor's announcement that you will require major surgery — is "wetness." Victims of "wetness" may "give offence to others" — unnecessarily, of course, thanks to the miracle of the aerosol can — but the ailment never seems to be terminal.

★ ★ ★

Another problem among the commercial inhabitants this season is "ring around the collar." This is a condition in which the interior of a man's shirt collar is laundered only incompletely. Rude strangers who detect it — it is unclear how they know your collar is dirty inside; surely, only your hangman can know for sure — in any case, these rude strangers then chant, "Ring around the collar! Ring around the collar!"

Ring around the collar is not a major concern in the world on this side of the tube. The real collar problems out here are grim. Such as fraying around the collar because of the inflated cost of shirts. People who live in television commercials never have the kind of problems caused by unpayable prices and lack of money.

For that matter, they never seem to lack money, except when there is some unutterably sweet, understanding, good-fellow, loan-company handout artist waiting in the next scene to pay their bills.

The rest of the day, they are busy solving their little non-problem problems by splurging money on shirts at inflated prices, instant "wetness" cures, and a new razor blade so wonderful it will shave barbed wire with grandmother's lye soap.

The world of television commercials is not entirely changeless, although most of the problems being confronted there this fall are the same problems that were being solved exactly the same way 20 years ago. Nobody in commercials solves his identity crisis anymore with a cigarette, which is one point at which the people of the commercials have gained on the rest of us.

There does not seem to be as much trouble with men's hair grooming as in the past. Unsightly dandruff seems to have gone out of vogue on television, rather in the way tonsilectomies have in the real world since doctors have overcome the patient shortage.

The problem of the slow-starting car, it is comforting to see, still lingers on for those cold winter mornings. How pleasant it is, pausing even so briefly at a world where a car problem is a car that starts slowly on a winter morning.

In a world as it is, we accept slow starting on winter mornings without thinking about it. Not even non-starting on summer mornings startles us too much, although it is admittedly an irritant. An irritant, but not a problem. In the world as it is, a car problem is a car that has been in the repair shop for two weeks and a man there who hates to be telephoned and wishes you would quit annoying him about it.

It is not healthy to spend too much time watching the people who live in the television commercials. They have been locked up in that tube for too long. At least since 1952, at a guess.

POLLUTION REGISTRY LIMIT SET

There are only 15 days for companies and other groups or individuals who generate air emissions containing contaminants to register with the provincial pollution control branch.

Resources Minister Ray Williston issued the reminder Wednesday.

His release was a mixture of encouragement and warning. Advertisements this summer and fall drawing attention to the new regulations on air emissions have produced a good response, he said.

But he also noted that at some time in the future the pollution control branch will be compiling an inventory of all air emissions which are not registered.

An initial stage in the province's campaign against pollution is to build a record of where waste discharges are occuring.

But a requirement that all land and water discharges be registered with the pollution control branch by the end of 1970 drew such a desultory response from indústry the deadline was recently extended to March 31, 1972.

The province has been working harder to publicize the Dec. 31 deadline for registering air emissions.

Williston said advertisements have produced a great number of enquiries and 759 registration forms have been completed to date.

Forms can be obtained from the office of the pollution control branch in Victoria or district offices in Cranbrook, Nelson, Prince George, Vernon, Kamloops and New Westminster.

New Tenders, Low Deposits

A new tender call will be issued in January for a low-income rental housing project in Saanich.

Making the announcement Wednesday, Ald. Edith Gunning, chairman of Saanich lands and housing committee, said this time the tender specifications drawn up by Central Mortgage and Housing corporation will require only a "modest" security deposit.

As a result, she said, smaller building companies should have no difficulty in submitting proposals for the 60-unit dispersed housing scheme.

Only four bids came in response to the original tender call and all were rejected Nov. 18, mainly because they did not conform to financial requirements.

Mrs. Gunning later charged the CMHC's bonding requirements were too strict for smaller developers, whom the scheme had been specifically designed to attract. She asked the federal agency to issue a revised tender call.

CMHC manager Chris Dowling said Wednesday instead of the 10 per cent bid bond and 10 per cent performance bond originally stipulated, firms will be asked to deposit $250 per unit submitted.

The specifications will again call for 60 dwellings of two and three-bedroom units, detached, semi-detached or row housing, in groups of 20 units or less.

APPOINTMENT of Billy Wade Smith, 43, as residential manager of the bleached kraft pulp mill at Gold River, has been announced by the Tahsis Company Ltd. The post became vacant last month with the resignation of Denis Catford to join Weldwood of Canada Ltd.

Third Man Jailed

The third man in a Sidney forgery ring was sentenced this week to 18 months in jail after he was found guilty in Sidney police court of forging cheques totalling $1,436.

He is Kenneth Fielding, 29, of 9275 East Saanich Road.

RCMP said that the crime ring had passed 30 cheques totalling $2,500 in Sidney and in Victoria. Some of them were government cheques which were obtained from mail boxes at Sidney Post Office.

Police said that these crimes are closely related to drug offences involving the same six persons.

Fielding is the third member of the ring to appear in court so far.

Robert Gordon Jackson, 20, no fixed address, and Stephen Williams, 19, no fixed address, received suspended sentences from Judge D. G. Ashby in November on charges of uttering forged cheques. Jackson was placed on one-year probation and Williams was given two-years probation.

On Dec. 20, Stephen White, 19, 9555 Canora, and Douglas Grimsson, 20, of 1950 John St., will each be sentenced on a single charge of forgery. The sixth youth, Calvin A. Tremblay, 19, no fixed address, will appear for trail Jan 17, charged with a similar offence.

Anderson to Try Again

MP David Anderson wants a second investigation into the use of federal waterfront property in Victoria for dumping waste materials.

In a letter sent this week, to the head of the federal Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, Anderson says a piece of federal land in the city's West Bay is "being used as a dump."

"I am informed that the gate to protect the property has been broken off," Anderson added.

Earlier this week, Anderson asked the government to take legal action against Diamond Developments Ltd. because the company dumped landfill on the federally-owned foreshore.

The property Anderson says is being dumped on is known as the Barnard Estate, an undeveloped three acres which the city of Victoria has been trying to buy from Ottawa to use as a park.

The Diamond Developments apartment construction project is adjacent to the federally owned estate.

In his letter to Crown Assets chief J. Miquelon, Anderson said:

"I would be grateful if you would check into this matter and if no permit has been issued for this deplorable practice, if you would ask the appropriate authorities to take legal steps against those responsible.

"I would appreciate being informed of developments on this matter just as soon as possible," Anderson's letter concludes.

Meanwhile, the Victoria Labor Council Wednesday night gave its support to Anderson for his earlier action against Diamond Developments for the developer's apparent encroachment on the West Bay waterfront.

Council vice-president John Schibli, an official of both the United Brotherhood of Carpenters and the Vancouver Island Building Trades Council, said building unions were "negligent" in not taking note of a fill operation and complaining.

"From now on we'll watch these job sites — are they going to add or detract from the environment," he said.

Anderson is investigating what he says may be theft of foreshore by apartment construction of Diamond Developments Ltd.

A federal official has said no applications for the fill have been received.

Canadians Save Aussies

VANCOUVER (CP) — Three young Canadians have been hailed in Australia as heroes for their part in a dramatic mountain rescue in northwest Tasmania.

They are Dennis Dooley, 20, and Ernie Michell, both of Vancouver, and John Kubacki, of Montreal.

The rescue operation took place Nov. 25 in blizzard conditions at Cradle Mountain, in Tasmania's Lake St. Clair national park.

In a letter to a Vancouver newspaper, Ian Brand, search and rescue officer with the North West Walking Club, said a 15-year-old Melbourne schoolboy died from exposure and several other members of his party suffered frostbite and exposure.

There's no doubt that the death toll would have been very much higher if John and Dennis hadn't acted as they did," Brand said.

Brand said the three Canadians were with a climbing party taking shelter in a hut in the rugged mountain country when several members of a Melbourne school party staggered in suffering from exposure and exhaustion.

He said Dooley and Kubacki organized a search party and set out in blizzard conditions to rescue the stragglers.

"They rescued eight boys and a teacher suffering from frostbitten feet," Brand said.

He said the 15-year-old boy died despite efforts by the Canadians to revive him with massage and resuscitation.

Brand said the Canadians turned over their food to the school-boy party, started a fire and set out on a 12-mile hike over rugged terrain to a ranger station.

Tax Bill Debate Nearing End

By DAN TURNER

OTTAWA (CP) — Commons debate on the government tax bill begins its three-day dance of death Wednesday.

Members have until Friday to make their final comments on the 707-page bill under a government time-limiting motion passed by the House Tuesday.

Opposition members—including Lincoln Alexander (PC—Hamilton West) and John Skoberg (NDP—Moose Jaw) used their last words to condemn government use of the guillotine rule to end the debate, while Liberal MPs defended the measure.

Meanwhile, in the Senate, a war dance started by angry senators last week continued about the brief period they will have to deal with the bill.

WANTS ADJOURNMENT

The Senate won't receive the bill until Friday—Dec. 17—but the government wants it through Parliament by Jan. 1.

Senate Opposition Leader Jacques Flynn has said he would move today to adjourn the Senate until Jan. 10, preventing it from dealing with the bill before the new year.

But there are only 19 Conservative senators compared with 66 Liberals, one Independent Liberal, two Independents and one Social Credit and the motion likely will be defeated after brief debate.

Also to be decided today is whether the Senate will sit Saturday and other extra hours to debate the bill.

Liberal senators Tuesday called for a conciliatory approach to government demands and Senator Flynn indicated he would ignore the bill when it appears Friday rather than trying to delay it.

Senator Ernest Manning (SC —Alberta) said Wednesday it would be impossible for the Senate to discharge its responsibility on the bill by the year's end.

"If it is to become law, it should be made clear to the Canadian people that it did not receive the meaningful endorsation of this House," he said.

"Either the Senate has a meaningful role or it has not. The time has come to find out."

In the Commons, Mr. Alexander said the bill was beyond "the immediate mental digestive system of MPs," and incomprehensible to ordinary Canadians.

Mr. Skoberg said Canadians would never understand the bill because debate had been cut short.

But Maurice Foster (L—Algoma) disagreed.

MILLIONS UNDERSTAND

The one million lower-income Canadians who would be removed from the federal income tax roll understood the bill, he said.

So did the 4.7 million Canadians who would pay lower taxes under the bill, and the 800,000 working women who would get child-care allowances.

Mr. Foster also guaranteed that the "tycoon friends of the Tory party" who had spent hundreds of thousands of dollars opposing the bill through full-page newspaper advertisements in recent months understood the bill.

"Some of these people understand that the tax-free ride that they have had is over."

Cubans Grab Exile Ship

MIAMI, Fla. (AP) — A Cuban exile-owned freighter, crippled by fire from a Cuban gunboat, was under tow toward the Communist Island today following a bloody attack on the high seas.

"The deck is covered with blood; I am dying, Chico," the freighter's captain, 55-year-old Jose Villa, said in a final and desperate radio message received in Miami Wednesday.

"Tell the coast guard to come quickly," Villa said. "Tell them there are dead and wounded here."

The attacked freighter, the Johnny Express, was the second ship owned by Bahama Lines of Miami to be seized by Cuba in 10 days.

Havana radio said today a Cuban naval vessel on the lookout for "pirate" ships spotted the Johnny Express and radioed her description to higher authorities.

"She was ordered to stop in order to be boarded and seized," A Cuban government statement said. "The pirate ship disobeyed the order and tried to escape. Minutes later . . . it was forced to obey the order and seized."

The declaration blamed the United States "as the principal perpetrator and inspirer of these acts of banditry."

"Several weeks ago, the 12th of October, the village of Punta Sama was attacked by a pirate launch and several persons were killed and others wounded," the radio said.

The Johnny Express had a crew of 14, including two American citizens, said Bahama Lines. It is the sister ship of the Lyla Express, which was seized Dec. 5 and taken to Cuba.

U.S. Coast Guard spokesman Ron Wright said planes with medics were dispatched purely on a humanitarian mission in efforts to provide medical aid for the crew and "we can't get involved in the fight." The planes were unable to find the Johnny Express.

The plight of the ship became known Wednesday when Bahama Lines received a distress signal. The Johnny Express, like the Lyla Express, had been returning from a run to Haiti. It was attacked about two miles off the coast of Little Inagua in the Bahamas.

In Washington, the state department said there was little the United States could do because the vessel was not an American ship and the attack did not take place in U.S. waters.

AUSSIES ADMIT AIR EXTORTION

SYDNEY, Australia (AP) — Two men pleaded guilty today to extorting $560,000 from Qantas Airlines in a bomb hoax based on the movie Doomsday Flight. They were ordered held for sentencing, but no date was set.

Peter Pasquale Macari, 36, a driver, and Raymond James Pynting, 28, a barman, were accused of bilking the airline in an elaborate plot last spring.

On May 26, a man identifying himself as "Mr. Brown" telephoned the Qantas office and said a barometric bomb had been placed aboard a Boeing 707 en route from Sydney to Hong Kong with 116 passengers aboard. A similar bomb, the caller said, could be found in an airport locker.

Authorities checked the locker and found a bomb which could be rigged to go off at a certain altitude. The caller said the bomb aboard the plane would explode as the plane made a landing unless it was defused, and for information on the bomb's location he demanded $560,000.

After the money was collected, "Mr. Brown" called the airline and said there was no bomb on the plane.

Police Sgt. Jack McNeil told the court today that more than half the money had been recovered. He said Macari was holding the rest as a "bargaining lever."

MICHENER CARRIES ON

OTTAWA (CP) — Governor-General Roland Michener's term is being extended a year to the spring of 1973, Prime Minister Trudeau announced Wednesday.

The Governor-General, 71, was appointed for the normal five-year term, which he will have completed next April.

Health Conference Stifled

OTTAWA (CP) — Weather stifled the start of the federal-provincial health ministers conference today, preventing the entire Quebec delegation from arriving and grounding Nova Scotia's minister in Toronto.

The conference met anyway behind closed doors to discuss the new formula for federal payments to the costs of provincial medical and hospital insurance programs.

There were early signs of dissatisfaction with formula changes proposed earlier in the year by the federal government.

Health Minister A. B. R. Lawrence of Ontario said the federal proposals are not acceptable because they are too heavily weighted in favor of the federal government.

PLANE GROUNDED

In addition, a proposed special fund to develop cheaper forms of health care appeared to have too many limitations on it, he said.

Social Affairs Minister Claude Castonguay of Quebec and his entire delegation missed the conference start. Their plane was reported grounded by fog in Montreal but was expected to make it later in the day.

Mr. Castonguay told the Quebec National Assembly Wednesday that he has an alternative to place before the conference, which is scheduled to continue Friday.

The Nova Scotia Health Minister Scott MacNutt sent word that he was stuck in Toronto. Manitoba Health Minister Rene Toupin also was absent, but the provincial delegation was led by Education Minister Saul Miller.

Health Minister Ralph Loffmark of British Columbia declined to discuss the federal proposals at all.

Health Minister John Munro has proposed that a top be put on the amount of federal contributions, now running at about $1.2 billion a year, and that future annual increases in the federal share be tied to the growth of the gross national product.

Christmas Light Fight Discontinued

After more than 30 years, the Christmas lighting competition for homeowners and merchants is being discontinued this year, the Victoria Junior Chamber of Commerce announced Wednesday.

The Jaycees said the original purpose of the contest, to boost festive spirit by encouraging decoration of homes and stores, "has now been well fulfilled."

However, the Jaycees will continue to publish their list of decorated areas worth viewing.

"This ist is only a suggestion of areas which we feel are typical of the usually high standard of Victoria's response to the spirit of Christmas," the Jaycees said.

There still will be a competition in the naval division of the Jaycees' Christmas lighting program. Judges will be Frazer McAlpine, Barry Bowman and Vince Cownden.

The public may view the entrants on Saturday and Sunday evenings, and again on Dec. 22, 27 and 28, from 7 to 9 p.m.

TIP HAT TO GIRLS

Seventy unions affiliated with the Victoria Labor Council will be asked to contribute financially to the Christmas fund of the striking workers at Sandringham Private Hospital.

Victoria Labor Council delegates endorsed an appeal Wednesday night to affiliated unions for the contributions.

"The trade union movement should tip its hat to the girls at Sandringham and make their Christmas a bit happier," said council vice-president John Schibli.

Twenty-eight employees of Sandringham, members of Local 1311 of the Canadian Union of Public Employees, went on strike almost 15 months ago seeking a first contract with the company, which had kept operating by hiring replacements.

'Speed Up No-Fault Claims'

Settlement of no-fault insurance claims should be speeded up, a provincial ombudsman should be created and the minimum wage should be increased, the International Railway Brotherhoods recommended Wednesday.

These were the highlights of the railway association's annual presentation to the provincial cabinet. Respecting no-fault insurance, the group called for an investigation of claims which remain unsettled.

They said a higher minimum wage would give people more motivation to work. An ombudsman would safeguard citizens' rights, said the group.

Their briefs to cabinet also called for increased provincial aid for low-income housing and co-operation with the federal government to increase vocational training.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

A 23-year-old mother of two who put on a pair of boots at a downtown department store and walked out without paying for them was sentenced to 14 days Wednesday by Judge William Ostler.

Gloria J. Nicloux, 23, of 593 Cedar Crest, earlier pleaded guilty to stealing the lady's high boots, worth $16.99, from the Bay Oct. 29.

Court was told by prosecutor John Macintyre that the conviction was her third of similar nature.

Ostler said in view of the youngsters of the accused he was being "extremely merciful in the situation" regarding penalty.

★ ★ ★

Ivan E. Generoux, 23, of North Bay, Ont., was fined $250 when he pleaded guilty to driving with a blood-alcohol reading over .08 per cent.

★ ★ ★

Ronald Bergie, 30, address unknown, was fined $350 by Judge E. F. N. Robinson for impaired driving and prohibited from driving except when working.

★ ★ ★

Lawrence Alexander Sutherland, 43, of Sooke, was fined $250 for driving with a blood-alcohol content over .08 per cent. He was banned from driving for two months except when working.

Park Money Increased

The provincial cabinet has approved payment of a special warrant of $275,000 in aid of regional parks development.

Approval was given Monday and announced Wednesday through release of orders-in-council. The warrant brings the government's share of regional parks development this fiscal year to $2.1 million.

The government originally estimated spending $1.1 million this year.

Special warrants in September and November increased this amount.

Mutiny Conviction

SALONIKA (Reuter) — A court martial sentenced a Greek army colonel to 14 months in prison Tuesday night for instigating mutiny and insulting the authorities. Col. George Anyfantis 45, a commander of a battalion of armored cars in Polycastron, was arrested last May when he moved his vehicles with the aim of seizing Salonika.

Fewer Meetings?

The Victoria Labor Council may not be holding many meetings in 1972 under new quorum regulations imposed by the Canadian Labor Congress on all labor councils.

Delegates to Wednesday night's meeting agreed to appeal to the CLC to allow the council to operate within its present constitution until "roadblocks" can be discussed.

The present quorum is 20 delegates from six unions. Attendance is usually between 25 and 40 delegates from 20 to 25 unions.

The new quorum would be, in Victoria's case, 50 delegates from 18 unions.

Council vice-president John Schibli said Victoria would be lucky to have two meetings a year under the new rules.

Secretary Larry Ryan said the new rules "might make academic sense, but no practical sense."

Labor Council Backs New Mackasey Bill

Support was voted at the Victoria Labor Council Wednesday night for pending federal labor legislation — and federal Labor Minister Bryce Mackasey.

Delegates backed the minister in his critical comments Tuesday against the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce. He urged employers to "get with the 20th century."

Council secretary Larry Ryan said the bill is a "major piece of legislation." One section provides that employers under federal jurisdiction must give 90 days' notice of technological change.

"This is a modest proposal attacked by the chamber of commerce, the prophet of doom and gloom, hollering and screaming at Labor Minister Mackasey," he said.

"We should throw our support behind progressive federal legislation."

Council vice-president John Schibli, saying he isn't a Liberal, said "once in a while we should take a positive view" of government measures.

"He's being viciously attacked by the chamber of commerce and manufacturers' association," Schibli said, calling the federal bill "a step in the direction we are aiming."

MORE MONEY FOR SEWERS

The Capital Regional District agreed Wednesday to seek an amendment to its letters patent for sewage disposal to increase its borrowing authority by $8 million.

The district now is empowered to borrow a maximum of $13.2 million. The new figure, which needs provincial approval, is $21.2 million.

Executive director Dennis Young said the original borowing was mainly for Macaulay Point. Present and future work is in Central Saanich, Sidney, Saanich and the study of McMicking Point in Oak Bay and Clover Point in Victoria.

BOARD BANS REPEATERS

Directors of the Capital Regional District board voted Wednesday to prevent persistent rezoning repeaters.

The board agreed with a recommendation of the zoning sub-committee that where a rezoning application has been refused, no re-application for the same amendment shall be considered within 12 months of the previous application.

Directors approved two rezoning applications: For a campsite and camper court on Happy Valley Road near Winter and for a residential subdivision at Park Dale Road and Sooke Road. Public hearings will be held.

Turned down were applications for assembly and manufacture of fibreglass boats, Millstream Road and Danbrook, and residential subdivision between Latoria and Winthrop, near Wishart.

Labor Unrest Potential High

By ROGER STONEBANKS
Times Staff

Two hundred contracts affecting nearly 200,000 trade unionists in British Columbia are up for negotiation between now and early 1972.

That adds up to the potential for a repeat of 1970's hectic months of labor-management relations which piled up a record 1.6 million lost working days because of strikes and lockouts.

But it is only "potential" for a repeat. Forecasting in labor relations is more uncertain than reading the future in tea leaves.

And, before 1971 runs out — some good news. Indications from preliminary research are that 210,000 working days were lost in strikes in lockouts, the lowest since 1965. Negotiations this year involved 75,000 workers and 130 contracts.

Main areas of negotiation next year are hospitals, cartage and highway trucking, forest industry, construction and towboats.

Major contract negotiation years run in two-year cycles because contracts tend to be renewed for this length.

An exception this year is the pulp and paper industry, which settled with three unions in 1970 for three-year contracts.

The first major dispute involves 15,500 hospital workers, members of the Hospital Employees Union and the Registered Nurses Association of B.C.

The provincial government has placed a ceiling of 6.5 per cent in increased wages and fringe benefits for hospital workers in 1972. The Hospital Employees Union, with 10,000 members, had been seeking 25 per cent more in wages over two years.

The union will take strike votes in the first week of January. The RNABC moved to the mediation officer stage when the ceiling was announced.

The Teamsters Union has been in negotiations for 5,000 drivers and warehousemen in cartage and freight, whose contracts expire at the end of the year.

Early this year, a cartage strike-lockout was ordered ended, drawing loud protests from the union, whose Canadian director, Senator Ed Lawson, has said that such a future back-to-work order would be ignored.

The union has been seeking a wage increase of $1.40 an hour over two years in the cartage industry and an extra two cents a mile on the mileage rate for long-haul drivers.

The Teamsters, in a strategy move to avoid the B.C. mediation commission, has been successful in having three companies which deal in inter-provincial freight switched from provincial to federal jurisdiction.

By shifting as many companies as possible to federal jurisdiction, the union could hope to settle disputes with them and set a pattern for companies under provincial jurisdiction, avoiding a total shutdown.

A management spokesman for the construction industry said 46 contracts covering about 50,000 workers are due for renewal in the spring.

C. J. Connaghan, president of Construction Labor Relations Association, which bargains for about 600 contractors, said if strikes and lockouts are avoided, 1972 could be one of the most productive years in the province's history.

Some unionists believe that a failure to reach terms could create a worse situation than the lockout-strike which idled up to 35,000 in the spring and summer of 1970.

Also up for renewal is the coast master contract covering 28,000 members of the International Woodworkers of America, working in logging, sawmills, plywood mills and shingle mills. The present contract expires in June. The coast industry involves 116 companies represented by Forest Industrial Relations.

Paid Holiday For UN Day

ST. LOUIS, Mo. (AP) — The McDonnell Douglas Corp., will be the first company in the United States to give all its employees a paid holiday in observance of United Nations Day, the aerospace firm has announced.

All 93,000 employees in the United States and Canada will be given the holiday, designated as the Monday of the week in which United Nations Day—Oct. 24—occurs.

Police Push Urban Budget Up

MONTREAL (CP) — The Montreal Urban Community expects to triple its expenditures next year, mainly because it will take over financing of a new integrated police force for Montreal Island.

The urban community Wednesday night unveiled its 1972 budget with total expenditures of $160,277,440, a large increase from the $52 million allotted in this year's budget.

The jump in costs is expected to result in higher taxes in most of the 30 member municipalities, a boost of up to 40 per cent in some instances.

Lucien Saulnier, executive committee chairman of the urban community, said Wednesday night the increased total expenditures will mean an average 20-per-cent increase in contributions from member municipalities.

They will be billed at a rate of 71 cents per $100 valuation.

SONG PIRATES SOUR NOTE

HOLLYWOOD (AP) — They don't fear eye patches or brandish swords, but the pirates who steal songs are as threatening to recording artists as the real thing was to seagoing traders.

Big record companies have filed suit and requested raids on bootleg record plants. A recent raid by U.S. marshals closed down the huge Hollywood operation of a chap who gleefully called himself The Rubber Dubber.

Record companies say they lose about $150 million annually to pirates. These are record producers who copy major hits — by stealing the master copy or taping them from radio broadcasts—and sell the records at cut rates.

"The consumer finds out later that it doesn't sound right," says Isaac Hayes, whose record album Shaft is a top seller. "Some will go out and buy another record, but many of them can't afford that."

Hayes, 28, gets triple royalties as composer-musician-singer of Shaft. He says he's lost about $5 million to pirates, and he has taken the most drastic action of any recording artist. He's hired ex-FBI agents to fight the pirates.

The agents sealed off a Memphis, Tenn., sound studio where Hayes's new album, Black Moses, was being recorded. They put an armed guard on the master copy around the clock, and the production point was kept secret.

Since the pirate's success counts on getting a copy out before the original hits the stores, the agents rode shotgun with delivery trucks to the retail outlets. Two million copies were shipped before pirates could attack.

It's difficult for a consumer to spot the fake before he gets it home "unless he knows what he's looking for," says one spokesman. A copy won't bear the company trademark in most cases. The customer has to know which company produced the record.

Under an amendment to the federal copyright laws, companies will be able to take stronger legal action against pirates starting Feb. 15.

Under previous laws, only a musical composition could be copyright, and swiping it was a civil violation, not criminal. Under the new statute, an entire record can be copyright, and pirating is a misdemeanor punishable by up to one year in prison and up to $1,000 in fines.

Air Canada Cool to Concorde

MONTREAL (CP) — Air Canada has an option to purchase four supersonic Concorde aircraft of the type which carried French President Pompidou to his meeting with U.S. President Nixon this week in the Azores.

An Air Canada spokesman said Wednesday the option means only that the airline has bought the right to purchase planes at a certain point in the Concorde production schedule, but this does not commit Air Canada to such purchases.

Recently, Claude Taylor, Air Canada vice-president, said the high cost of operating planes such as the Concorde, their possible environmental damage and a general economic slowdown in the western world has left airline executives less than enthusiastic.

He said Air Canada would not operate any supersonic aircraft if there was "appreciable detrimental effect on the environment."

He also compared the $32-million cost of a Concorde with $8 million for a 180-passenger DC-8, $16 million for the larger Lockheed L-1011 and $23 million for the 360-passenger Boeing 747.

He questioned whether the higher cost for the Concorde was justified, since it could only operate economically "on the basis of a premium fare." And he asked how many people would pay more for a shorter flight.

Planes such as the 747 would have their major impact on medium-to-long-haul travel in the 1970s because they were profitable on such routes and were quieter and cleaner than the DC-8 or the Boeing 707.

In Vancouver, a spokesman for CP Air said the airline had no plans for ordering the Concorde.

"We had three delivery positions on the Boeing supersonic airliner, the American plane, but production on that plane has been halted," the spokesman said.

"We have no plans to order the Concorde. It does not have the range required for our routes," he said.

Ottawa Buying Mini-Sub

OTTAWA (CP) — The Vancouver firm of International Hydrodynamics Co. Ltd. has accepted a federal government offer to buy a miniature submarine, which was earlier slated to go to Russia, a trade department official said Wednesday.

He was commenting on a reported statement Tuesday by Al Trice, a director of the company, who said that no offer had been received from the federal government.

Not only did the federal government make an offer, said the official, but the company has accepted it.

"Furthermore," said the official, "some money has already changed hands between the government and the company."

Joyce McWilliams, comptroller of International Hydrodynamics, said in Vancouver that she plans to phone Ottawa today to see who is making the statements regarding a federal government purchase offer.

"As far as my knowledge goes, we are still under contract to the USSR," she said.

It was disclosed Monday that the federal government cancelled an export permit Dec. 1 for the sale of the $2 million research submarine to Russia.

Trade Minister Jean-Luc Pepin said the permit was cancelled on grounds of Canada's national security after "new information" had been gathered and following consultation with the U.S.

Barry Mather (NDP — Surrey-White Rock) said in the Commons Wednesday that some of the submarine's components were made in the United States.

TC Gets Gas Permit

CALGARY (CP) — Trans-Canada Pipe Lines Ltd. was given permission Wednesday to export an additional 410 billion cubic feet of natural gas from Alberta.

The company had requested an additional 2,140 billion cubic feet but the Alberta Energy Resources Conservation Board rejected the application because Trana-Canada does not have sufficient gas reserves under contract to support the additional volume."

The decision now must be ratified by the provincial government and the National Energy Board must also approve before any export can take place.

The additional gas would come from fields previously included in Trans-Canada's export permit and from five fields to be added.

Trans-Canada uow has the approval to remove a total of 22.7 trillion cubic feet to be remaining established reserves of gas in Alberta at June 30, 1971, amounted to 45.8 trillion cubic feet and that reserves are growing at the rate of 2.4 trillion cubic feet a year.

The board estimated that exported over 25-year period ending in October, 1995.

It estimated Alberta's 30-year requirements for gas, until 2001, will be 16.6 trillion cubic feet.

Madill

Results in the first half of the year ending next June 30 will be "as good as we've ever done," reports Charles Madill of S. Madill Ltd., Nanaimo equipment manufacturer.

The builder of specialized logging machinery said things have returned to normal after a period of uncertainty evolving from U.S. protective measures in August. There is a backlog of orders for the current quarter and the quarter starting in January, Madill said.

Directors have declared an extra dividend of two cents a share on the common stock for a total eight cents payable next month, the first extra since April 1970. The 6½ per cent preferred stock will get 16½ cents.

IUC

Fully diluted share earnings of International Utilities Corp. rose substantially in the last quarter and nine months to Sept. 30, despite only marginal increases in revenue.

The company had sales and revenue totalling $230.3 million ($220.57 million) in the quarter and $694.5 million ($643 million) in the three quarters.

Net income was $10.2 million ($6.5 million) in the quarter, after preferred dividends, and $32.56 million ($23.4 million) in the longer period, leaving share earnings of 64 cents (45 cents) and $2.04 ($1.49) respectively.

Maclean-Hunter

Shareholders of Maclean-Hunter Ltd. have approved creation of two new classes of shares and splitting of present common shares.

New class A and B shares are created. The existing common shares and class B shares will be split two-for-one and the common shares will become class A.

President D. G. Campbell said marketability will improve and advantage is taken of new federal tax legislation.

Grey Goose

Grey Goose Bus Lines Ltd., a privately-owned Manitoba company, will offer shares to the public in Manitoba and B.C.

Grey Goose Union Ltd., its current tite, has filed an offering prospectus in the two provinces, covering issue of not less than 100,000 or more than 220,000 common shares at a price of $2.50 a share.

President A. J. Theissen said the Manitoba Securities Commission has approved the move and clearance is expected shortly from BCSC. The company also intends to apply to list shares for trading on Vancouver Stock Exchange.

Net proceeds of the issue are to be used for new equipment and facilities for services in Manitoba and in parts of northern Ontario and Saskatchewan.

Laurentide

Vancouver-based Laurentide Financial Corp. Ltd. reports a new lending and leasing company, North Continent Capital Ltd., has been formed.

The new company will enter the commercial lending and industrial leasing fields, Laurentide said.

Partner in the venture is San Francisco-based Bankmerica Corp., with 49 per cent against Laurentide's 51 per cent of the $2 million in paid-up capital of North Continent Capital Ltd.

Head office will be Vancouver and a branch will be in Toronto. Chairman is Paul Britton Paine, chairman of Laurentide and executive vice-president of Power Corp. of Canada Ltd.

Eastern

Turning its 1970 loss situation around, Eastern Airlines reports net income of $2.7 million (15 cents a share) in its latest financial period. This compares with $2.9 million loss a year ago.

Operating profit rose from $60,000 to $3.4 million, including a 2.1 million profit on the sale of aircraft.

Operating revenue climbed 18 per cent to $86.8 million.

Historic Travel Firm Goes Up for Sale Today

LONDON (CP) — The historic travel firm of Thomas Cook and Son Ltd. goes up for sale today and city bankers are anticipating hot competition for the daddy of all package-tour pioneers.

Lord Thomson, Canadian-born publisher whose empire includes a flourishing travel subsidiary, and Trafalgar House Investment Ltd., a real-estate group; which last summer acquired Cunard Steam-Ships Ltd., have been previously expressed interest in the disposal of Cook by the government which took over control after the Second World War.

The government's Transport Holding Company, subject to the passing of a bill now approaching its third reading in Parliament, has authorized sale of the whole of Cook's issued share capital of $11.25 million.

The sale is part of a Conservative policy of selling off some commercially-attractive government holdings.

The Cook group, whose activities include the sale of travellers' cheques, the purchase and sale of currencies, shipping and forwarding services and the short-term investment of cash flowing in from advance bookings, also has properties valued at $21.4 million.

In 1970 it handled $662.5 million worth of business.

The organization that gave rise to the phrase "Cook's tours" began when Thomas Cook, a printer by trade, started arranging public excursions for temperance societies in the industrial midlands of England.

In the 1850s, he and his son John turned full-time to organizing Continental travel for the masses.

The Cooks organized their first Continental circular tour in 1856 and their first North American tour 10 years later.

In 1874 they introduced an early form of travellers' cheques and in 1879 established a banking and exchange department. By the 1900s the Cook family was taking charge of royal tours, pilgrimages to Mecca — and even the relief expedition sent by the British government to the aid of the ill-fated Gen. Charles Gordon, beleaguered at Khartoum.

Horne & P.

Horne and Pitfield Foods Ltd. report net income of $338,168 (18.5 cents a share) for the 28 weeks ended Oct. 16, compared with $280,846 (15.3 cents) for the period last year.

Sales amounted to $45.6 million compared with $41 million, an increase of $4.6 million (11.2 per cent).

Always A Kind Ruling

OTTAWA (CP) The tax appeal board, which once decided that VD shots and protection payoffs by a Vancouver madam were not legitimate tax deductions, was replaced Wednesday by the new tax review board.

The change ends 22 years of historic, sometimes hilarious, written judgments on the nearly 12,000 taxpayers, ranging from big corporations to race-track touts.

The board's six members, three of whom now are in their 70s, tended to be gentle with the taxpayer, tough with the tax collector.

The decisions — more than 10,000 — often affected thousands of other taxpayers. The board recently decided, for instance, that feed lots in which cattle are fattened are legitimate farms, a judgement that saved feed-lot farmers a good deal in taxes.

As the end came this week, one member was in Edmonton listening to renowned animal lover Al Oeming's contention that his game farm near Edmonton is a farm, not a zoo as the revenue department says.

Oeming at one point wanted to bring a cheetah before member J. O. Weldon as an exhibit.

FALL BEHIND

The board, established in 1949 as an inexpensive tax court, was required by law to write judgments. And the problem in recent years had been that it can't keep up with mounting appeals.

One member does well to write 45 judgments a year and this year alone 1,300 appeals are expected. The backlog, says Registrar P. H. McCann, is 1,400 to 1,600 cases.

Members expect a deluge — one says "a nightmare" — when tax changes now before Parliament become law. Meanwhile, three members are retiring: Chairman R. S. W. Fordham, 74, Maurice Boisvert, 74, and W. O. Davis, also over 70.

The tenures of the other three — Weldon, Roland St. Onge, and A. J. Frost — expire next year.

The new chairman, appointed by Justice Minister John Turner, is a 47-year-old Ontario county and district court judge, Keith Allan Flanigan of Ottawa. Judge Flanigan, who belongs to the Canadian Tax Foundation, will eventually have a seven-member board.

PAY LEGAL COSTS

Where the revenue department appeals a board decision under the new law, passed by Parliament last year, the government will pay the taxpayer's legal costs when the amount of tax involved does not exceed $2,500. The new board won't have to make written judgments.

Responsibility for the new board is shifted from the revenue department to the justice department to "strengthen the independence of the tribunal," Turner says.

"Having a board composed of members appointed for a limited term, and reporting to the minister of national revenue, who happens to be one of the two parties to every suit, has given some people the idea that the board is not as impartial as it should be."

Recalled McCann of the late Stanley Fisher, a board member who had been with the revenue department collecting taxes for years before his appointment:

"He always sided with the appellant (the taxpayer). He could be very caustic with the minister."

PROMPT DECISIONS

The new members will hold office until they are 70 and will be expected to make decisions "as informally and expeditiously . . . as fairness will permit," Turner says.

"I think they're hoping we can give judgments from the bench with a few well-turned phases "a member said wanly on the eve of the board's end.

"We always figured that unless we gave pretty convincing reasons, we didn't do much for the taxpayer," added the member, who like the others often toils several weeks over a judgment.

"If we can explain why he has been legally taxed, he feels better about it. We feel we served a useful purpose by explaining why," he said.

And, as often as not, an appellant won his case, buoyed by lines such as:

". . . a taxpayer should not be criticized if he does not arrange his affairs so as to enable the Crown to put its largest shovel into his stores."

Goalies Spurt In Point Race

By The Canadian Press

Rare occasions, indeed, these days when goaltenders can boast they contributed to the offensive efforts of their teammates.

But there were moments to remember on three National Hockey League fronts Wednesday night, all in winning efforts.

Chicago's Tony Esposito sent Bobby Hull away for the winner in a 2-1 Black Hawk decision over Buffalo Sabres, Ken Dryden abetted Frank Mahovlich's opener in Montreal Canadiens 3-1 score against Los Angeles Kings, and Gilles Villemure assisted on a Jean Ratelle goal in New York Rangers 6-2 drubbing of Philadelphia Flyers.

The assist for Dryden was his third of the season. Other goaltenders who have aided on goals during the 1971-72 schedule include Gerry Cheevers of Boston Bruins, Roy Edwards of Pittsburgh Penguins and rookie Jim McLeod of St. Louis Blues.

LEAFS WIN

Elsewhere Wednesday night, Toronto Maple Leafs edged Pittsburgh 3-2 and Minnesota North Stars used Murray Oliver's two goals and Gump Worsley's "mad" goaltending to subdue St. Louis 4-1.

The Rangers, leading Montreal in the East by three points, move into Boston Garden tonight against the third-place Bruins while Philadelphia is at home to Buffalo.

The opportunities were few at Chicago, each team getting only 19 shots, but the Golden Jet made the most of his chances, scoring both Hawk goals.

Pit Martin set up the opener at 4:07 of the first period, then Esposito scooped the puck behind the Chicago net to Hull, who skated the length of the ice before putting it behind Sabre goaltender Dave Dryden.

Defenceman Brad Park made it five goals in two games at New York, scoring twice in the Ranger onslaught that knocked Philadelphia goaltender Doug Favell out of the game—the eighth time this season the New Yorkers have sent the opposing netminder to an early showers.

GAMBLE TAKES OVER

Ratelle's score, at 17:31 of the second period, marked Favell's exit and opened a 5-2 lead for New York. Bruce Gamble, who came on in relief, faced another 15 shots, yielding a third-period goal to Walt Tkaczuk, as the ever-pressing Rangers poured 51 shots at the Flyers' cage.

The game was marked by several fights, including the re-run of a fight that took place between New York's Glen Sather and Flyer defenceman Rick Foley a week ago.

At Minneapolis, the North Stars continued their domination of St. Louis that began in the post-season playoffs last spring, winning their sixth straight over the Blues.

GUMP'S MAD

Worsley, still fuming after his previous start last Sunday when Chicago pumped four goals behind him and drove him from the game after the first 12 minutes, admitted he was mad after Wednesday's game.

"You're mad at everybody and anybody when something like that happens. Nobody likes to have that done to him," added the 42-year-old veteran who previously played with Montreal and New York.

Jacques Lemaire's goal and assist at Los Angeles paced the Montreal. It was his 10th goal of the season at the 37-second mark of the second period proving the winner.

The Toronto game was rugged but loosely played with Paul Henderson's 18th goal late in the game giving the Leafs an edge.

Rockets Take Turns Scoring

By The Associated Press

Houston Rockets have figured out a way to win: staggered scoring.

Stu Lantz scored 26 of his game-high 30 points in the first half Wednesday night, as the Rockets built up a 62-53 lead by intermission over Atlanta Hawks.

Elvin Hayes scored 21 of his 28 points in the second half, but the most important points of all came in overtime from Cliff Meely, Houston's rookie forward, who hit a baseline jump shot with just four seconds left to give the Rockets a 117-115 triumph over the stubborn Hawks.

In other NBA action, Boston Celtics beat Seattle SuperSonics 112-100, Phoenix Suns whipped Cincinnati Royals 128-108 and Milwaukee Bucks topped Buffalo Braves 122-108.

In ABA action, Kentucky crushed Carolina 137-93, the Floridians flipped Virginia 119-105, New York Nets nipped Memphis 109-100 and Indiana defeated Dallas 124-110.

Houston held a seemingly insurmountable 98-80 lead with 9:37 to go, but Atlanta came roaring back. The lead changed hands four times in overtime before Meely settled matters.

Lou Hudson led the Hawks with 34 points.

Four Celtics scored 20 points or more as the Celtics topped the Sonics. Don Chaney and Jo Jo White netted 22 each, centre Dave Cowens had 21 and forward John Havlicek chipped in with 20.

Dick Van Arsdale hit on 11 of 17 field goal attempts and nine of 11 free throws for 31 points to pace Phoenix. John Mengelt led Cincinnati with 31.

Kareem Jabbar scored 35 points as Milwaukee registered its seventh consecutive victory. Bob Kauffman led the Buffalo attack with 29 points.

Cougars Fire Salvo; Deserve New Respect

That was a pretty good hockey game at Memorial Arena on Tuesday night. Too bad it was almost ruined by some loose officiating, and a threatened revival of the lunatic fringe.

There should be a new respect in town today for the young Cougars after what they did to one of the better clubs in the Western Canada Junior Hockey League. They took on a lot of character in that 6-3 victory over Edmonton when they might have been forgiven if they had wilted under the terrific pressure exerted by their bigger foes in that crunching final period.

If their unassuming recent record of 10 straight losses caught the highly-rated Oil Kings off balance, the Cougars knew what to do with the opportunity.

They just skated almost stride for stride with the Kings and perhaps served a mild warning that no longer are they to be considered the league's patsies.

It wasn't that it was a classic win in the true sense of the term. Far from it. Rather it was a gutsy performance, born of sheer determination in an effort to prove a point that caught the eye.

And the victory may turn out to be more psychological than surprising. The club needed a lift, and got it, with the biggest goal output of the season, which in itself is a plus; and it shrugged off a dangerous late-game rally by the Oil Kings to snap in two quickies and salt the verdict away. For which the Cougars also deserve marks.

Ballance Can Do Much Better

It was the final stand that really put the Cougars of Tuesday night a cut above the Cougars who played here earlier in the season. They had often been guilty in the past of accepting an invitation to collapse, but this time they refused to knuckle under.

But then it is a different team, isn't it? There are only six (or is it seven) players still around from those who played in the season's first game. Meanwhile, when Rudy Pilous was here, he suggested the Cougars had "a fine nucleus," and Brian Shaw of Edmonton said virtually the same thing while predicting nothing worse than a fourth-place finish for them.

Wishful thinking at this late date? Perhaps. But at least there is the hope that the newcomers may become inhibited with the idea that they can win after all.

Meanwhile, if the Cougars' show was commendable, there was one that was not altogether so. Referee Barry Ballance who had a fair game going for the first two periods, almost let matters get completely out of control in the third period. He can do better.

And it was unfortunate that the game finally did degenerate into a brawl, because tighter control may have prevented the outburst.

And if Ballance missed the incident that caused the battle royal, it was when Edmonton's John Rogers flicked his stick at goalkeeper Fedorak, and Fedorak retaliated, naturally. (Both incidentally, got off scot-free.)

But this can happen, and if the Oil Kings were in a petulant fram of mind, they had other reasons besides the feared disgrace of losing to the Cougars.

The night before they had their coach assaulted by a fan in Vancouver.

Durham May Have Had Right Idea

Shaw had his coat ripped off his back which prompted a chase through the stands with Shaw and three Edmonton players in pursuit of the assailant.

And for a few moments on Tuesday night, it appeared there might be a repeat performance here, if not by Shaw, by some of the Oil Kings.

There was some shouting (some say grabbing) by some of the arena's lunatic fringe whose only design in life is to antagonize, and not compliment, the youngsters who are providing the entertainment. And it looked for a moment as if an ugly incident might result.

The Oil Kings were being goaded — unfairly, it seemed; and it was only self discipline that kept matters in hand and the guilty fans safe from attack.

I'm not too sure where a fan stands if a player should suddenly slug him with his stick. He wouldn't be standing for long that's for sure; and even if it is against all the rules of decorum, I often wonder if defenceman Pete Durham of the old Cougars didn't have the right idea after all.

He once went up and over the wire at the south end of the arena and chased a fan, who was bad-mouthing him, right out of the place. For which he was chided by the league president, naturally.

Good natured bantering is fine and part of the game; but keep those hands to yourself. Otherwise you are fair game, and an excellent target.

So all spectators on that fringe be hereby warned! There was another time when Durham got his back, and good. He had been hit on the chest with a plastic cup full of soda pop while skating along the boards in Seattle. He noted from whence the missile had been launched, and waited. A few minutes later he was in that area again. Casually, he raked his stick along the boards, and it was fortunate indeed that one Seattle fan that night lost only two teeth.

It could have been serious!

Loynachan Remains On Cats' Missing List

Eric Bishop thinks there's a Cat on the loose somewhere between Victoria and Manitoba, and he's anxious to find him.

The missing person is Rod Loynachan, a left-winger obtained by Victoria Cougars last week in a multi-player, Western Canada Hockey League trade with Flin Flon Bombers.

Loynachan was in the Cougar lineup and scored one goal in Victoria's 3-2 loss against Brandon Wheat Kings last Saturday, but failed to show for a date with Edmonton Oil Kings Tuesday night.

Early today, Bishop remained uncertain as to where Loynachan is, and why he disappeared so suddenly.

"All I can tell you is that he's probably somewhere between here and Manitoba," said the Cougar general manager. "I'm still trying to get hold of him."

Loynachan's parents live in Thompson, Man.

Bishop received some good news Wednesday, however. Winger Jim Carter, who left the team in Winnipeg with a torn thigh muscle Dec. 3, says he will be back to Victoria shortly after Christmas.

"His family doctor said the injury just needed rest and no surgery was necessary," Bishop explained. "If that's right, we'll certainly welcome him back."

Cougars' next game is in Vancouver Friday night against the Nats. Missing will be first-string goalkeeper Darryl Fedorak, who has an examination to write at the University of Victoria early Saturday morning.

Bishop said Dave Maynard will start Friday's game and that a netminder from the Victoria Junior Cubs will be his backup.

Leftwinger Wayne Bianchin lost his contact lenses during a third-period fight in Tuesday's game and is a doubtful starter against the Nats. He also suffered a cut to his upper lip which took several stitches.

Cougars meet the Bruins in New Westminster Sunday and then have an eight-day Christmas break before their next home game, Tuesday, Dec. 28 against Saskatoon Blades.

In the only league contest Wednesday, Medicine Hat Tigers thumped the visiting Bruins 6-2. Jeff Ablett scored three third-period goals for the Tigers who moved within five points of second-place Edmonton in the western division.

The loss left New Westminster in fourth place, nine points behind the Tigers.

Hunter Sets Pace For Belmont Win

Wendy Hunter scored eight points Wednesday to lead Belmont to a 24-22 upset victory over Victoria High and into second place in the Victoria Senior High School Girls' Basketball League.

It was Belmont's second consecutive victory, coming on the heels of a 43-29 decision over Esquimalt Monday, and snapped a five-way tie for second place.

The teams were deadlocked 10-10 at half time, but Belmont took a two-point lead early in the third quarter and held on.

The Braves were picked behind defending provincial champion North Delta Huskies, runner-up Burnaby South Revels and Centennial Centaurs of Coquitlam, who feature a six-foot-11-inch centre, Lars Hansen.

Belmont won the Victoria title last season by beating Victoria Totems in a special playoff game.

Completing the top 10, in order, were Vancouver College Fighting Irish, North Surrey Spartans, Mission Meteors, Mennonite Educational Institute Eagles, Abbotsford Panthers and John Oliver Jokers.

Finley's Promise Forgets Peanuts

OAKLAND (AP) — Pitcher Vida Blue, the American League Cy Young and most-valuable-player awards winner, will get a "substantial raise" over last year's $14,750 rookie contract, says Oakland Athletics owner Charles O. Finley.

"And I'm not talking about peanuts," Finley said Wednesday in a telephone interview.

Finley said he is awaiting word from baseball commissioner Bowie Kuhn on contract guidelines.

Blue himself is on the way to Vietnam with Bob Hope and other entertainers, but he has been quoted as saying "I'm going to make a whole lot more money next year."

Asked about his reaction should Vida come up with a figure of around $100,000, Finley replied:

"I don't know. I've never had anyone ask me for $100,000."

Marvin Miller, executive director of the Major League Players' Association, has sent a letter to players bringing up the matter of increases for athletes and entertainers.

He cites Blue and Joe Namath of the New York Jets' football team as examples of persons with "unique" job problems.

Miller pointed out that it may be some time before the federal pay board rules on sports.

Specific individuals are not barred from salary boosts above the 5.5 per cent guideline set by the board, but the unit in which they work must not exceed that. The question of what is a unit has not been defined.

Finley said he had a copy of the letter but would have no comment.

Struggling Trailers Forced to Pack It Up

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. (AP) — The perennial basement team of the Eastern Hockey League, Jacksonville Rockets, have been dissolved.

Beset by debts estimated at $30,000 and poor attendance, the franchise held by Winter Sports Inc. was surrendered and the team disbanded Wednesday.

Three possible sales failed to materialize and general manager Bob Sabourin said "all avenues of hope were exhausted."

He said six players made tentative connections with other EHL teams and efforts would be made to place all of them.

This was the seventh season for the Rockets here and they spent most of them in last place. Only once did they make the post-season playoff.

Kilmer Displays Kamikaze Pilot's Traits

By TOM SEPPY

WASHINGTON (AP) — On a date now lost to history, Billy Kilmer took one of those psychological tests professional football clubs force on their players now and then. One look at Kilmer's paper told the tester that he would make a "perfect Kamikaze pilot."

Kilmer never did become a Kamikaze pilot, but he channelled the traits that surfaced in that test into becoming a winning quarterback in the National Football League.

Cocky despite what the pros consider limited skills, and gutty because of it, Kilmer has provided the passing ability and the leadership to guide Washington Redskins to a spot in the NFL's post-season playoffs.

And, suddenly, people are asking what is Billy Kilmer like, just as they asked several years ago what Joe Namath was really like.

Kilmer, some say, is tough enough to be a Marine Corps lieutenant, and entertaining enough to charm the ladies. He dresses mod, but the hair style is somewhat of a compromise between Namath long and Johnny Unitas short.

His main weapon seems to be his ability to get his troops to follow him, and the nickname Furnace-Face has been tagged on him because of how red his face gets when he is angry.

Kilmer's personal high-water mark has come this season after playing for San Francisco '49ers and New Orleans Saints. Old Furnace-Face now is the toast of Washington, saluted as the guy who brought the Redskins their first post-season berth since 1945.

He led the Redskins to a 38-24 victory Monday night over Los Angeles Rams in what many referred to as a revenge game for his coach, George Allen, who was fired as the Rams' coach last Christmas.

In his first trade after being hired in January, Allen made a deal with the Saints for Kilmer, who had been selected in the first round by San Francisco in the 1961 draft.

"Of course, I had my doubts about coming to Washington," said Kilmer. "I never even thought that I could beat out Sonny Jurgensen, and I didn't want to spend a year on the bench. You get rusty in a year and then nobody wants you. I wanted to go somewhere else where I could play regularly."

There was no doubt that Kilmer would be No. 2 quarterback to Jurgensen, a 37-year-old with 15 seasons of experience, when he arrived in Washington. Then, Jurgensen injured his arm in a pre-season game and was scheduled to be out for a minimum of seven weeks.

Allen, who had traded vigorously to build for a winning season this year, called on Kilmer to lead the Redskins. He hasn't been disappointed.

"I knew I could do the job," said Kilmer. "I'm not a kid just learning the game."

Spreading Cottontails Will Alter Wildlife Scene

Cottontail rabbits, which appeared in the Sooke area in the late 1960s as a result of accidental releases from a private zoo, are spreading rapidly along the east coast of Vancouver Island. This past summer a number were found in the drainage of the Chemainus River. In November the first specimen was recorded from the Nanaimo area.

Previous to this year, according to the fish and wildlife branch, they had been confined south of the Malahat but, it now appears that they will spread up the east coast of the Island unhindered.

What effect this population will have on the other plant and animal populations of the Island is totally unpredictable, according to the Vancouver Island regional biologist. Speculation is that the limited population of silver fox introduced into the Courtenay-Campbell River area in the early 40s will increase and spread with the advent of a new food source. It will also likely increase the predator population with possible harmful effects to other wildlife species like grouse and small animals, which will be preyed upon as secondary food sources.

It is certain, however, that there will be marked changes in wildlife populations on the Island now that the cottontail rabbit is a permanent species.

★ ★ ★

The attitude of naturalists and wildlife managers towards alien wildlife introductions to Vancouver Island has gradually changed during the past decade. In the past it was one of almost total rejection for fear of destroying the Island's unique ecosystem. Today, however, there is restrictive approval, particularly when it has become apparent that the logging industry has seriously altered the ecosystem of the Island.

This does not however, sanction careless releases of a species with potential explosive and destructive populations.

Vancouver Island already has a number of established introduced species of wildlife including the ring-necked pheasant, to mention a few. These species of wildlife. Pheasants and quail have inhabited the farmlands, which previously had no native game birds that would adapt to the changes man made on the lowlands. Sparrows and starlings, on the other hand, have been a disaster for small native nest box species of birds. So destructive are these two species that they are on the unprotected list of Canadian wildlife.

Western League Reaches Crossroads of Survival

SEATTLE (AP) — The president of the Western Hockey League says it is doomed unless its cities somehow attain major league status.

There are three routes to that status, president Bill MacFarland said Wednesday, and a decision must be made by June.

"It's either major league status or go out of business, I think," MacFarland said. "We can't operate as a minor league in our cities any more. We're in major league cities competing against major league sports."

The league has asked the National Hockey League what its expansion plans are. The NHL has said it plans to expand from its present 14 teams to 24 teams during the decade. It already has named Long Island, N.Y., and Atlanta as two choices.

The WHL is awaiting further word so it can chart its own future. MacFarland says he knows of no plan to include the WHL in NHL expansion.

"I'd be silly not to say I would like that to happen, but I have no knowledge of any such plan," he said.

"We are in the same position minor league baseball found itself in several years ago," MacFarland said. "Minor league hockey faces an abrupt end."

If WHL cities are not included in NHL expansion plans, MacFarland said, his league would have to look at the two alternatives.

The WHL could simply declare itself a major league and bid against the established league for players, or join the World Hockey Association, the fledgling group which says it will become a second major league.

In the WHL are Seattle, Portland, San Diego, Salt Lake City, Denver and Phoenix.

UNIVERSITY PROBE AIMED AT ATHLETICS PHENOMENON

OTTAWA (CP) — The Canadian Intercollegiate Athletic Union is moving to investigate a phenomenon: the influence of imports on Canadian university athletics.

The semi-annual meeting of the directors of the 49-member union this week named Bruce Coulter of Sir George Williams University chairman of a committee to see how strong foreign and especially United States, influences are on Canadian campus teams.

The move is unusual in that the collegiate athletic drain is usually in the other direction.

John McConechy of the new union secretariat here explained in an interview that the main problem is three different sets of criteria for imports across the country.

The union now makes no distinction between Canadian and non-Canadian university athletes. As long as they attend Canadian universities, they can play.

But in the new Great Plains Athletic Confecence (Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Thunder Bay) no import freshmen can play intercollegiate sports. The new Canada West Athletic Association (Alberta and British Columbia) holds that persons transferring from U.S. post-secondary schools to those in Canada must sit out the first year they are here, but import freshmen will be treated like native Canadians as far as eligibility is concerned.

Dennis Kadtz of the University of Calgary said this was to eliminate the practice of having U.S. athletes who have played out four years of eligibility at home transfer to Canadian universities and immediately continue their athletics.

"If they transfer for academic reasons," he said, "they shouldn't mind."

The Maritimes are one of the areas most likely to be affected by any restraint of U.S. collegiate imports. Vance Tanner of the University of Moncton wasn't sure restrictions are a good idea although his predominantly Frenchspeaking school has "no more than 10 at the most" U.S. students on campus "and none at all one our university teams."

"In our area, some (universities) draw as much as 30 per cent of their student body from New England and you have to be careful that you're not being discriminatory against certain areas of the country by establishing national legislation of this sort."

Start on Treadmill ... Then 'Think Low'

ST. Sauveur, Que. (CP) — The first time you see an adult strapped to a set of three-foot skis going down a major slope, you'll swear suicide is the motive.

Either that or you'll decide both skis and skier are a long way from their proper milieu — water-skiing.

But it is really a part of learning the winter sport under a unique approach known in the business as GLM — Graduated Length Method.

GLM has been around for a good many years, but it is relatively new to Quebec.

The philosophy of the method is "think low."

GOOD RESPONSE

It places all emphasis on the lower body — the hips, legs and feet — in teaching the sport.

Two Quebec areas — Mont Echo in the Eastern Townships and Mont Gabriel near this Laurentian resort north of Montreal — have undertaken GLM in a big way with good response from the customers.

"I can't believe it," Stan Segal, director of Mont Gabriel's ski school, said. "You can't believe how many people want to learn it."

The method is a system whereby a skier starts on a set of three-foot skis, works up to four-footers, then fives, then regular skis.

"Many of the new skiers like the five-foot skis and stay with them," Segal said.

Segal's wife Jan, who also teaches at her husband's school, said:

"They take off on those five-foot skis, and with such manoeuvrability they look as good as we do, people who have been skiing a long time. It can be embarrassing."

INCREDIBLE CONTROL

Segal, who has so dedicated himself to the method of teaching that he has invested in 30 pairs of the undersized skis — 30 in each size — explained:

"We're basically teaching people to ski with their feet. Oh sure, all that shoulder motion looks flashy, but it's unnecessary.

"And anyone can learn this. And, unlike direct parallel (another new teaching method), you don't have to be a great athlete to learn. You have incredible control with these short skis."

START BEHIND DESK

The first step in learning to ski for Segal takes place, strangely enough, behind his desk. That's where Segal has an electric treadmill.

"They learn the basic footwork there," he said. "Then they're ready for the slopes."

And as you improve, your skis get longer.

There are a couple of other advantages of the short skis which aren't apparent at first.

For one thing, you can ski down the hill for the first time holding on to your instructor's hand — the short skis won't get tangled with the teacher's.

Also, they are not in the way when you are riding a lift, an awkward experience for many beginners.

Segal cites one drawback to the method from a business standpoint.

"We're making skiing so easy, we cut down on the number of lessons."

BEER PRICE BRINGS BILL

BOSTON (UPI) — A bill introduced in the Massachusetts legislature would permit any ticket holder to a New England Patriots football game to bring a six-pack of beer to any home contest.

"A lot of my North Attleboro people are very upset that it costs about 80 cents for a cup of beer at the stadium," said Rep. Donald T. Bliss, who filed the measure.

Busy Rondon Looks at Foster

CLEVELAND, Ohio (AP) — Vincente Rondon, World Boxing Association light heavyweight champion, unmarked while scoring an eighth round technical knockout over challenger Doyle Baird here Wednesday night, is eyeing a bout with deposed champion Bob Foster.

Rondon peppered a helpless Baird with left and right combinations in the final round and referee John Christopher called the Venezuelan the winner as soon as Baird fell flat on his back for the third knockdown.

It was Rondon's fourth successful title defence in 10 months and he was visited in the locker room by Agustin Barres, A San Juan, Puerto Rico, fight promoter who wants Rondon to meet Foster there Feb. 18.

Rondon, a 27-year-old who weighed five more pounds than Baird at 175, claimed the WBA title last Feb. 27 with a fifth-round technical knockout over Jimmy Dupree after Foster was stripped of the title for not meeting Dupree, then the top contender.

Rondon, who now has won 23 straight fights and has an overall 38-5 record with 21 knockouts, was guaranteed $30,000 for the fight while Baird, a 33-year-old from Akron, Ohio, made about $8,000 or 20 per cent of the gross of $42,085 from a disappointing turnout of 3,908 fans.

Andy Puts Fans in Trees

AMBRI, Switzerland (CP) — Andy Bathgate is playing amateur hockey for the first time in 20 years and fans are sitting in the trees to watch him and his team in action.

At 39, Bathgate played more than 1400 games as a professional since he graduated from junior hockey at Guelph, ranking sixth among all-time point-scorers in the National Hockey League before retiring at the end of last season.

Now he has taken over the team in this small village of 500 people and it has become the hotbed of Swiss hockey.

They come from far and wide to see high-scoring Andy and after nine rounds of the Swiss championships his team holds the attendance record in the country's top league.

Up to 9500 people have been packed into the open-air rink for a game, not counting the ones perched on trees behind the grandstand or watching through field glasses from the nearby mountainsides.

"I have never seen such an atmosphere and such an enthusiasm," says Bathgate, who is reported to be costing the club $25,000 as playing coach on a five-month contract.

HIGHEST PAID

This makes him the highest-paid athlete in Switzerland. He also is the most talked-about and written-about sports figure in the country.

"He is great, not only as a player but also as a coach and person," says Dr. Ennio Rossetti, president of the Ambri club.

Ambri is a small place, almost a mile above sea level and just south of the Gotthard heights. There is little in the way of recreation for youngsters here, and playing hockey has become a tradition ever since Bob Kelly of Edmonton gave the initial push in the 1950s.

'Amateur' Gets Top Swiss Pay

The club has to draw fans from across the Gotthard Mountains and from south of the Ticino Valley. They arrive in special trains and by cars and buses up the only road leading to the village.

There are only 1000 seats in the rink, and other fans stand in cold, rain and snow to root Andy's team on. Giant cowbells and other instruments create such a din that sometimes players do not hear the period-ending siren.

Ambri belongs to the canton (province) of Ticino, the Italian-speaking part of Switzerland. For some reason the residents call Andy "Signor Bagat," which in dialect means Mr. Shoemaker. It may be the closest they can come to Mr. Playmaker. Playmaking is a Bathgate specialty.

Bathgate enthralls spectators with setting up plays, as well as scoring on his own. He is among Switzerland's top scorers and has had one four-goal performance.

Bathgate has helped endear himself by enrolling, along with his wife Merle and his two children, in Italian-speaking courses.

"We are very happy here," Bathgate says "Everyone is very nice. We just feel sort of bad that we can't speak the language."

Bathgate also puts in much of his spare time teaching hockey fundamentals to the village kids.

"I want to set up a minor hockey league program here so that I can leave something behind, regardless of whether I come back here or not," he explains. "It's important that they produce their own players here. They have not the money to buy established players."

Some other Canadians have been with, or are with, Swiss clubs.

Harry Smith of Trail, and Greg Pilling of Lethbridge, had temporary appearances as playing coaches. Among the more successful Canadians in the country are Jean Cusson, a former member of the Canadian national team; Derek Holmes and Wayne Small, last year with Ottawa's Carleton University, and Michel Ortuso of Montreal.

Washington Forced To Wait for Baseball

WASHINGTON (AP) — Baseball Commissioner Bowie Kuhn says a major league team for Washington in 1972 is not possible. But he left open the possibility that a new team will move into the U.S. capital in 1973.

"I don't see any prospects for 1972," Kuhn said after meeting with a Washington delegation seeking a new major league franchise. "I think it would be unfair to talk about 1972."

Kuhn headed the high level group representing baseball. It included the American and National League presidents, Joe Cronin and Charles Feeney, and club executives John Galbreath and Edmun Fitzgerald of Milwaukee Brewers.

"We're discussing all aspects of the problem," Kuhn said, mentioning that the discussion touched on broadcasting rights, lease arrangments and concessions.

"We do not expect to resolve everything in today's meeting," he said.

"I see nothing but positive action coming out of the meeting," Cronin said.

Fitzgerald suggested the Washington group should follow the example of Milwaukee in its successful efforts to reobtain major league baseball.

"They are going to have to get a group and go to all the meetings and stand in the halls, looking through peepholes and waiting to get inside," he said.

Hams to Drive If You Get 'Sort of Innocently Drunk'

Victoria Times
THURSDAY, DEC. 16, 1971. 25
SECOND SECTION

Mobile radio hams and Saanich police are offering a novel "drive home service" Christmas Eve for the person who finds a few drinks at the office party have snuck up on him.

The Victoria Citizen's Band Radio Car Club will man three of their radio-equipped cars that night and each will have two drivers aboard.

The cars will respond to calls from what Saanich police Sgt. Bill Chisholm called "sort of innocent drunks," people who didn't plan much drinking but suddenly find they've had too much to drive safely after attending such impromptu gatherings as office parties.

People trapped downtown in this condition who can't get a taxi or a ride home but need their car at home can put in a call for help to Saanich police.

The police will pass the word to one of the cruising radio car club autos. One of the drivers will drive the caller home in his own car while the other club member will follow to pick up the driver.

There will be no charge for the service. It's a contribution by the car club to safer traffic conditions and Chisholm says it could also save a family a good deal of grief at Christmas time.

Rather than ruin Christmas for himself and family, particularly the children, by getting into an accident or stopped by police when he is impaired, the driver who has done a bit of celebrating now has a safe alternative, Chisholm said.

And he needn't worry about calling police for help in this situation, he added. There will be no trouble with the law so long as he doesn't drive his car.

Chisholm said he had checked out the plan with a couple of taxi companies. They told him they are always extremely busy Christmas Eve and the program could actually help them.

The project is one of a number of public service efforts the club plans, said president Al MacKenzie.

It's for the person who's had too much to drive safely but must have his car at home Christmas Eve or Christmas Day.

Accident statistics from the Motor Vehicles Branch show there were far more mishaps in December than October or November of last year.

No similar operation is planned for New Year's Eve. Chisholm said excess drinking that night could be labelled "planned drunks."

Pay Boosts Blamed As Tax Hike Looms

A tax increase in Victoria is likely next year, according to preliminary budget estimates presented to council members this morning.

Officials warned against making definite tax increase predictions, but wage contracts signed last year, especially with police and fire forces, have already committed the city to hefty spending increases.

NO BIG PROBLEMS

Today was the first time aldermen have tackled budget problems this early in the year. Normally the budget is presented well into the year it affects, usually in April.

Comptroller Jim Bramley told aldermen gathered as committee of the whole that "we are ending 1971 with no major budgetary problems."

As the figures stand now, in rough form, the city is faced with an increase in expenditures of about $2.5 million, representing a rise of about six mills.

Aldermen made no attempt to cut the estimates, but discussed several ways of improving revenue.

These included a one-quarter per cent increase in the business tax and a fee for rezoning applications for developers.

In the forecast, the city's budget would rise to about $27.3 million from a projected 1971 figure of $24.8 million.

Fire chief Eric Simmons is asking for 21 new fire fighters, who would start work Oct. 1 next year.

The initial cost would be about $55,000, but in future years it would add another amount of more than $200,000. The projected 1972 fire fighting budget comes to $1,335,800, up from this year's $1,199,350.

$1.7 MILLION

The police department's budget could rise from this year's $1,553,765 to an estimated $1,743,000, depending on future wage settlements.

Both fire and police forces received wage hikes last year but new contracts starting March 31 have yet to be written.

Bramley estimated that the city can expect an increase in the assessed value of city taxpaying property of more than $5.5 million over last year, to a new total of $163,500,000. This alone would bring in an added $240,000 in revenue without raising the mill rate.

35,000 Saw Fish

A total of 35,000 persons watched salmon spawn in Goldstream River this fall, according to a count completed today.

Park naturalist Freeman King said the figure includes 3,600 school children from Victoria, Saanich, Sooke, Duncan, Cowichan Valley and Lake.

"Some of the visitors were from Saskatchewan, Ontario and Quebec," he said.

A count of salmon spawn escapement in the river shows an increase in the number of coho and a decrease in chum.

Fisheries official Harry Grainger said 1,500 coho spawned in the river as compared with about 1,200 last year. The chum were down from 5,000 to 3,500.

"We are pleased with this year's coho escapement," he said. "This is an improvement."

He estimated about 90 spring salmon escaped up river.

Vandals Hit Builder $5,000 Reward Set

By ROGER STONEBANKS
Times Staff

A non-union contractor is offering a $5,000 reward for anyone seeing or knowing about property damage at an Esquimalt building site.

Hans Hartwig, owner of Wigmar Construction Ltd., said someone poured water into the gasoline tank of a backhoe between Monday evening and Tuesday morning.

Esquimalt police confirmed they received a complaint from Hartwig and investigated.

"We don't know if it was kids or malicious," said police chief Earl Sarsiat. "It looks more like kids."

He added that if it was not children, those concerned would have "covered their tracks."

Wigmar has been the focal point of an organizing drive by construction unions against non-union contractors.

Deliveries of ready-mix concrete were interrupted at one point but these resumed after a B.C. Supreme Court injunction was obtained.

John Schibli, secretary of the Vancouver Island Building and Construction Trades Council, said Wednesday "the fight with Wigmar is still going on" because the injunction related only to interruptions of ready-mix concrete.

"Other avenues are wide open and we intend to proceed with it," he told Victoria Labor Council delegates.

Schibli said the policy of the building unions is that construction sites shall be 100 per cent union, or 100 per cent non-union.

Meanwhile, the newly-formed non-union contractors' association issued its first press release and named its officers.

Hartwig is president of the Right to Work Association of Vancouver Island. Sam Snoblen is vice-president and lawyer George Jones is secretary-treasurer.

"The association will support every effort to maintain the right of every member of the construction industry to work," the press release stated.

"They will support any member who faces coercion or intimidation or attempts to force him to join any organization that he does not wish to join.

"The association will protect individuals from being forceably removed from construction projects against their will and will also assist all members of the construction industry to improve their knowledge of the construction industry and the complex labor problems existing today."

BALMY VICTORIA ESCAPES SNOW

While most B.C. centres, including Vancouver, dig themselves out of the snow, Victoria emerges again green-clean.

The weatherman said today the Arctic front is retreating from southern B.C. and milder weather moving in, which doesn't make much difference for balmy Victoria.

Some melting snow fell on Victoria overnight and a light snowfall dusted the higher elevations in the area this morning.

High for today is predicted as 44, and the low tonight should be 35, with partial clearing expected today.

And to make you feel even better, it was a frosty 44 below overnight in Edmonton.

Drug 'Philosopher' Jailed

A 29-year-old man, who pleaded guilty today to possession of marijuana, told Judge William Ostler that he used the drug to "grow" his consciousness.

Herbert K. Gerhardt, of no fixed address, was sentenced to two months in jail. It was the accused's second conviction for marijuana possession within a year.

"I did not harm anybody physically or spiritally," Gerhardt said.

The accused, originally from Germany, said he should be allowed to use "sacraments" to help him meet God.

Ostler said if Gerhardt chose to live in Canada he should accept the laws of the country.

Gerhardt referred to Nazi Germany and said "they obeyed the laws and were still criminals."

He said he believed man's first allegiance was to his consciousness.

Ostler disputed the accused's argument saying he wasn't viewing the situation over-all. The judge said if the accused possessed marijuana it meant someone was supplying it to him, a business he described as "nefarious."

★ ★ ★

Gerhardt was apprehended outside a house in the 800-block North Park about 7:15 p.m. Wednesday.

He had about an ounce of marijuana with him which he admitted was his.

Court was told that he was convicted of an identical offence in Montreal last December.

Heroin Addict Jailed at 14

A 14-year-old boy who has been addicted to heroin and was transferred to adult court for lack of custodial facilities at the juvenile level was sentenced to at least four months in prison Wednesday by Judge William Ostler.

Defence counsel Mike Hutchison said the boy had been addicted to heroin about two to three months but "appears to have shaken it."

The youth pleaded guilty Wednesday to six counts of breaking, entering and theft. Money, liquor, cigarettes, a lighter, a Canadian passport and a watch were among items taken from homes on Lampson, Joffre, Dunsmuir and Wollaston in Esquimalt.

The offences occurred in June, September and October.

★ ★ ★

Hutchison said the case was a "most difficult and trying" one and the offences were committed while the accused was "attempting to go it alone."

He added that the boy was substantially involved in heroin at the time.

Prosecutor John Macintyre said the youth had been sent to Riverview for psychiatric examination and had been returned fit to stand trial.

He said the boy had been transferred to adult court because facilities at juvenile court were not adequate.

Ostler sentenced the boy to four months definite and eight months indeterminate in prison. He recommended that the sentence be served at a forestry camp.

The judge noted that recent changes in the law made it possible to give the accused a definite-indeterminate sentence.

He said a year ago a conviction would have meant the youth would have been sent "to a common jail."

Officials Suspect Arson in $115,000 Fire

Fire officials suspect arson in a fire which caused an estimated $115,000 damage Tuesday night to the Hillside Pharmacy, adjacent businesses and apartments above.

Victoria deputy fire chief Carl Coates said today the suspicion exists because there is "no logical source of ignition" such as electric wiring, in the immediate area where the blaze started.

He said investigating officials from the fire marshal's office in Vancouver will examine the ruined corner block at Quadra and Hillside today.

The fire started at the bottom of some stairs behind The Booke Shoppe at 1007 Hillside, Coates said, and worked its way through a covered passage into the back of the drugstore.

Coates said among the items stored in some cupboards near the spot where the fire started was an oil drum, but this had not been a contributing factor as the fire worked into the cupboards from outside.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for the Walkey family, which has operated a drugstore at Hillside since 1945, said Wednesday he wasn't sure whether the store would ever reopen.

It was also uncertain whether the building could be rebuilt.

Two doors away from the heavily-damaged corner block, the Fox Theatre received severe water and smoke damage. But owner-manager Barney Simmons said today he is hoping the cinema will be able to reopen Friday night.

"It needs a complete paint job to get rid of the smoke markings and smell," he said, "and the wall-to-wall carpeting has been ruined."

The residents of the seven apartments, who spent much of Wednesday searching the rubble for useable items, have had to move to temporary accommodation. Most are living with relatives or friends.

Private Mail Haulers Dig In To Battle Government Takeover

Private mail haulers in western Canada, including Alert Service Transfer Co. Ltd. of Victoria, have formed an alliance to oppose the post office's method of taking over mail transportation March 1.

The group has requested a meeting with Postmaster-General Jean Pierre Cote and its lawyer, Ian Jessiman of Winnipeg, said that unless the post office shows "good faith" and is prepared to reverse its position on compensation, the companies are prepared to discontinue service almost immediately.

Alert Service president M. R. Williams said the post office is willing to buy trucks and equipment used in mail transport, but not make a settlement for lost business.

He said the post office contract is 70 per cent of his company's business. The company would lose at least $25,000 a month income.

Twenty-five drivers will lose their jobs with Alert Service, but he said they will be hired by the post office.

"They have made commitments for the men, but not the contractors," he said.

Jessiman said the post office is trying to make separate deals with each company and that the post office is not living up to promises to effect no hardships on companies involved.

The service provided by the firms is pickup and transfer of mail from mail boxes to the post office and delivery of mail out to terminal boxes.

3 Directors Miss Meeting

The three Victoria directors in the Capital Regional District missed Wednesday's board meeting.

But Mayor-Elect Ald. Peter Pollen attended as an observer.

No one could recall a previous time when all three city representatives failed to attend a regional board meeting.

Absent were Victoria Mayor Courtney Haddock, defeated by Pollen in last Saturday's election, Ald. Clyde Savage and Ald. Percy Frampton.

Board chairman Hugh Curtis said both Haddock and Savage indicated in advance they could not attend. No word was received from Frampton, but it was learned later he is in England until Jan. 10.

Cats and Carols and Christmas Cards

WHEN A FAMILY CAT clanks home with a steel trap gripping one leg, feline fanciers of Victoria don't hesitate to show their indignation. But SPCA enquiries have failed to reveal the existence of a cat trap-line operated in the Fort-Pemberton area.

Meanwhile, Cat Fleecy — may she be more careful where she steps in future — is recuperating from her ordeal in the Fort Street apartment she shares with human friends.

SPCA officers point out that a brush-grown vacant lot not far distant provides a haven for rabbits that have escaped their hutches. They suspect the trap which nabbed Fleecy may have been set by someone who was hoping for a long-eared catch. Since the trap wasn't anchored by its chain, their hypothesis is that a boy or boys may be at the root of this minor mystery.

But they're free to admit that they lack clues which would shed light. Unless Fleecy tells all at Christmas Eve midnight when animals talk, a mystery it is likely to remain.

Less baffling is the case of a whistling swan, now recuperating with the help of penicillin shots on a Metchosin pond.

It's believed that the whistler, one of species that occasionally breaks its migration from northern breeding grounds to winter in these parts, was caught by recent high winds and hurtled tail-over-teacup into a tree.

★

You may find the combination unlikely, but a transplanted London barrow-boy, a choir of small singers and a remedial teacher of arithmetic plan to lay on some pre-Christmas gladness and joy.

The recipients, if this happy notion comes off, will be elderly patients of still-picketed Sandringham Private Hospital.

In the years before nurses' aides and hospital management failed to agree on salary, December concerts were enjoyed by the hospital's 80 patients. But last year Christmas passed without a visit by entertainers from the world outside the hospital grounds.

Mrs. Monica Bell, who works with mathematically-inept boys and girls, learned that the elderly patients would dearly like to share a carol singalong.

She brought the word to Victoria West elementary school, where Mrs. Val Morgan directs a junior choir of sweet voices recruited from Grades 1 and 2.

With choir lined up, Mrs. Bell got in touch with Pat "Tosh" Kelleher, whose now-idled barrow once set the merry ghost of London's old Covent Garden dancing in Bastion Square. Tosh's gifts include a good singing voice. Although his luck has not been of the best lately, Tosh needed no second asking. If they wanted him to add his Cockney accents to the caroiling, why, Gor Blimey, he'd turn up and welcome!

So, all going well, and on a day still to be set, the patients in Sandringham will get their Christmas carols.

A nice idea. But in a spirit of non-partisian peace and goodwill, why not also belt out a couple of numbers for the pickets?

★

We have arrived at the days when the Christmas cards come pattering in. For that happy circumstance, credit the female of the species. If card-sending were left to the male, the makers of these bright and welcome tokens would probably go broke.

Thanks to wifely zeal, however, the cards get mailed in an exchange that now burdens postmen and their seasonal helpers.

It could be that those cards offer more than a hint as to the mood of the nation.

My impression is that this year's are smaller and homier than those of the 1970 sending. So far, we've had no mobiles and mighty few of the ornate confections that marked the years of peak prosperity.

Most received to date run to the traditional and the pictorial. Among our exceptions are a red eye-catcher from Japan in the shape of a Japanese house, and a card from Hawaii that breaks with the accepted colors of Christmas.

Black, that one, with a touch of gold, and sinister-handsome.

Consumers Critical

The Victoria branch of the Consumers' Association of Canada is concerned about the adequacy of a new consumer education course in B.C. schools.

The course, officially called Unit 6 of Guidance 9 and announced by the department of education in March and instituted in September, is compulsory at the Grade 9 level in all B.C. public schools.

A Victoria CAC branch brief to the commission on the public's role in education noted that since 1967 its education committee has pressured the provincial government for a consumer education course at the junior high level. The grade specification is to make sure students will be informed before reaching the school drop-out stage.

But the brief claims that the course is not being supported by B.C. universities in teacher-training programs and that present consumer education teachers have received no special instruction in course content.

It also states that supplementary consumer education courses should exist in Grades 10, 11 and 12.

Victoria School Board spokesman Bill Stavdal admits present consumer education teachers have no special training.

He added, however, that texts used in the course were comprehensive enough so that teachers doing their homework would qualify to teach the course.

Stavdal added that if there is a demand by students, parents and teachers for further study, and if the course is successful, more consumer education programs will probably follow in the near future.

UVic Dean of Education Dr. Hugh Farquhar said: "We haven't discussed it at all." He added that the department of education hasn't been approached by teachers or the CAC. He sees no immediate possibilities for consumer education in teacher-training programs.

The brief also said that the four-year effort to obtain the current course "illustrates the difficult task that faces a public effort to affect even a minor change in our educational system."

Community institutions should be more open to community influences, it said. "The public should have a voice in determining the content of instruction."

The brief criticized the lack of co-ordination between school and teacher-training programs, calling it a "matter of public concern."

It also called for an "Education advisory council," composed of members of the public and a lesser number of educators, to which individuals and groups could make representation. The department of education and universities would be charged to consider submissions from the council.

MASCARA FOR RICHARD is a vital part of his wardrobe as he prepares himself as clown. Down the corridor, two cold chorus girls wait their cue.

COOLNESS AIN'T EASY IN THE HOT ICE BIZ

As the Ice Capade corps whip onto the ice, smiles and costumes dazzling, little could the audience suspect the rough-and-tumble that goes on backstage.

The 60-odd members of the cast have nine costume changes to make, sometimes with as little as three minutes to get off the ice, into the dressing room and back again. Yet they manage, and there's still time for a little back-scene gossip and flirtation.

Like one girl smooching backstage with her boy-friend. Right in the midst of her sweet nothings, she zipped out on cue to do her number.

Some barely make the fast changes. One performer got into her costume all right, but not quite far enough.

"I told her to get into it further," lamented the wardrobe mistress. But the girl was too busy making a mad dash for the ice.

"Stopping to sneeze, you can miss a number," said Linda Bennett, 21-year-old performer. It's an expensive fault. A performer will be out a $15 to $25 fine from his pay cheque for a missed cue.

Similarly, the over-anxious performer must not peek through curtains to see if it's time, unless he wants a $5 fine slapped down on him.

Ice Capade opening night Wednesday in Victoria went smoothly, the 36th opening for the road show this season.

Nevertheless, all it takes is a stuck zipper to freeze the oldest pro.

$100 GIFT FOR STUDENTS

Santa Claus came early this year to South Park Elementary School.

When prinicipal David Allan opened his mail earlier this week he found $100 in ten dollar bills.

A note from the anonymous donor said: "According to an article in a local newspaper recently (Times, Sat., Nov. 20) there are some families whose children in your school lack many things which the rest of us take for granted. At this time of year they may lack some article of clothing.

"The enclosed may be used in any way to help them. As you are close to them every day you will know best how to distribute it."

Allan said Wednesday the money had already been distributed in the community.

"There is a Santa Claus to us," he said.

The anonymous gift restored Allan's faith in humanity: "Most people who give $100 want $100 worth of publicity. The donor was not looking for a thing for himself and there were no strings attached to the gift."

"We have found a use for the money and are very grateful," Allan said, "much more for the humanity of the act than for the money itself."

Craft Skills Come Alive Again

WENDY DEY – EDITOR

Steve Fletcher, 25, made flutes at crafts fair

Frank and Beth Hannigan work with wood and clay

By HELEN MELNYK
Times Staff

Before the machine simplified things, goods used to be made by hand. Those were the heydays of the craftsmen, highly skilled and respected members of the community.

With the advent of the industrial revolution, the man making goods with his hands gradually gave way to mass production. Only a small number of craftsmen stayed in business, dependent on the tastes and purses of the wealthy.

Now the young are trying to bring back the era of the arts and crafts industry. And Victoria is becoming one centre of this revival.

The shopper who steps inside the warehouse at 510 Fort might think himself back in a 12th century market place. About a dozen booths are set up in rows, manned by long-haired proprietors peddling pots, skins, candles and musical instruments.

A few days back, the old warehouse was full of junk and dirt. After a little broom and hammer work, it was transformed into a Crafts Fair where local artisans are displaying their wares from 12 noon to 10 p.m. every day until Christmas.

Philosophical

Ask a young craftsman why he chose working with his hands to make a living, and he'll probably become philosophical. Words like 'God', 'nature', 'the simple life' will crop up.

"People are coming to appreciate hand-work once again, as our society is becoming mechanized," said Frank Hannigan, a 26-year-old wood worker.

"As people become dissatisfied with their jobs and lot, they search for something they can relate to," he said. "Things that have been made especially for them, give people a certain sense of identity they cannot find in mass-produced goods."

Hannigan turns bowls and says that he never makes two of the same. "This would defeat the whole purpose of what I'm doing."

His wife, Beth, 25 is a potter. As well as making clay herself, she teaches other people her skills. Between the two of them, they manage to take care of themselves "very adequately." Eking out a living takes more ingenuity than money, the say.

"Our scale of living is higher than that of the average craftsman because we live in city," said Beth. "Many live in the country where the rent is cheaper, and they can grow their own food."

Barter Common

It's common practice for the craftsmen in the community to barter with each other, she said. The Hannigans trade their pots and bowls for clothing, food and leather goods.

They said that they choose to make crafts their trade because they like working with their hands and like the lifestyle that goes along with it.

"We meet people who are like ourselves," said Frank. "We are our own boss and free of the rigid nine-to-five workday schedule."

But to make it, a craftsman has to impose discipline upon himself, he said. He has to do his work every day, but he has the freedom to choose the time to do so.

Two booths over, Steve Fletcher, 25, was demonstrating his wares — bamboo flutes. Steve began his career playing a flute on a Vancouver street and one day came across a discarded piece of bamboo. This first successful attempt was also his first sale.

Since then he has branched out into making magic twiners, a lute-like instrument.

Steve quit a job as an electronics inspector in the States to come out to live in a cabin on Galiano Island. Twenty dollars a month is about all he needs to sustain himself.

Steve's formula for keeping living costs down so low is simple. "I don't buy much," he says. He eats simple food, and barters flutes for clothes or buys them second-hand.

Steve's neighbor, Niels the sculptor and Eric Rhode the painter, was chipping away at a rock. The man goes under two names, depending on which medium he's working in. "Just call me Niels," he said.

Thirty-four years old, Niels worked for 10 years as a surveyor to "retire." With the money he put aside he bought himself a home. This whittled down his monthly money worries to groceries and a few other essentials.

Since his retirement from the working life, Niels has devoted himself to art and people. He said that he didn't have the time or energy to do so before. He also gained the freedom to travel around Canada and the States to paint and show his work.

The little band of artisans and craftsmen is trying to remake the city, to go back to the bygone days of basics, he said. "The world we have been born and raised in has accelerated beyond our comprehension. People are born on plastic and concrete; they've never touched the earth."

The movement back to nature and the simple life is a quest for religious fulfilment, he said. "People in their plastic cells want to be part of God's universe, not the man-made one.

"The man working in the city is starved for something earthy. During the holidays, the highways are crowded with people leaving the cities to go camping, so they can touch a blade of grass.

"Though man lives far away from nature, he is attracted to it since he's part of it. By working with clay, wood and stone, man connects himself again with nature."

Wrong Choice Of Toy 'Harms' Child

OTTAWA (CP) — Construction sets may stimulate the imagination of children in a wide age range but they should be carefully chosen to suit a child's capabilities, says the Canadian Toy Testing Council.

An article on constructive play in the Canadian Consumer, a publication of the Consumers Association of Canada, says the wrong set at any particular age will frustrate the child and may create a dislike for all kinds of construction toys.

"You want the toy to present a suitable challenge but not to discourage a child," say Joan Cochlin, Moira Geller and Bev McAskin, members of the voluntary council. It is a group of Ottawa women who test a selection of toys in the home and periodically release the names of the best ones.

The council employs the educational skills of its members in the toy testing and draws a federal grant for its work.

The council members say parts that fit easily together and separate readily to create steady, balanced structures are a must for a properly functioning construction set.

"Consider the fitting mechanisms of the pieces in the light of the capabilities of the child. Sometimes fittings are too complicated, or too fiddly, and therefore too exacting for the age of the child intended.

"Consider also the versatility of the set. The more versatile a set is, the greater stimulus it will be to the child's imagination and the longer the hours of play."

More Suitable

There are two groups of construction sets. The first includes those with one, or a few, parts of different shapes, all parts having the same basic function. They are generally more suitable for younger children.

The second division includes construction toys that have components of different shapes and often increasing complexity with which the child can build realistic structures as well as designs of his own.

"Some sets in this division are excellent and have a very wide age span because of the different parts and the fact that gears and motors can be added as the set grows with the child."

There are specialized construction sets for older children or teen-agers. Electrical and mechanical models could really be classed as hobby items.

The council says clear instructions are necessary in these sets, the pieces must be of good quality and the end product must be satisfying and function well.

What's That You Say, Mate?

LONDON (AP) — "A lorry pranged the banner in the boot and I hadn't the readies to get it out of the ricky, so do you fancy taking the tube to the cinema or slipping round to the local for a pint?"

That's the kind of overheard remark that can make a tourist in London think something's gone wrong with his ears. It means, as anyone who took English lessons before coming over here might be able to figure out:

"A truck smashed into the trunk of my car and I didn't have the money to fix it, so do you want to take the subway to the movies or go to the neighborhood bar for a beer?"

The British Council—the government agency that sends scholars to remote places like Dacca and Addis Ababa to teach the pristine tones of Oxford English to the natives—predicts in its annual report that English will be the most widely spoken language in the world by the end of the century.

Just listening to the different use of words by North Americans and Englishmen, the ear boggles at what might happen once the language gets into the mouths of, say, Tibetans.

Slang, of course, which changes all the time, is bound to be different on opposite sides of the Atlantic.

A North American garbage can is an English dustbin. Sweets are candies. A chemist's shop is a drugstore, and a draper's shop is a drygoods store. Gasoline is petrol. A North American buys things on instalments, but an Englishman gets them on hire-purchase-often called the never-never plan.

An Englishwoman calls her lingerie her smalls. The toilet is the loo, an egghead is a boffin and the British government are plural.

Even pronunciation can be confusing. For yes, a North American may say yeah or yup, while a classy Englishman might mutter something like earce, rhyming with pierce. An English "no" is often pronounced near.

Does this mean the English are stiff and unimaginative with words? Near, near, a thousand times near.

They like to chop and change things — stark naked comes out starkers. And pregnant is preggers. Hong Kong is Honkers.

Other English-speaking countries have chosen sides and stuck with them. Thus Canadian speech is virtually indistinguishable from the American next door, but Australians, New Zealanders and South Africans speak fairly pure English English.

Canadians and Americans say stoves, but from Sydney to Johannesburg to London, it's cookers. Crackers in Melbourne or Liverpool means crazy in New York or Toronto.

'Ms.' for Humans

NEW YORK (UPI) — Ms., the first magazine devoted to women's liberation, made its bow this week with articles on "desexing the English language" and "down with sexist upbringing."

The magazine, pronounced Miz or Miss, was published as a 40-page supplement to New York magazine. The preview edition contained an article by Gloria Steinem, one of the better known figures in the women's liberation movement.

The solo edition of Ms. will go on sale Jan. 25. The magazine is named for the title members of women's liberation want given to women, replacing the "Mrs." and "Miss" now generally used to differentiate between married and unmarried women.

Clay Felker, publisher of New York, said Ms. "is devoted to women — not as role players, but as full human beings."

Silence Worse Than Noise

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Noise, scientists agree, is bad for you. But utter silence might in some respects be worse.

Noise above certain levels inflicts pain on human beings. At lower but still fairly high levels it causes loss of hearing. At still lower levels it induces in many persons a distressing symptom called acoustic fatigue amounting in some cases to "extreme exhaustion."

Dr. Gilbert C. Tolhurst, formerly associated with the office of naval research and now a teacher at the University of Massachusetts at Amherst, discussed human physiological and psychologological responses to noise in a recent issue of Naval Research Reviews.

There are some persons so sensitive to noise that they may long for total quiet. They wouldn't like it if they got it.

Researchers have rigged up what they call anechoic rooms where no outside sound penetrates. They also have managed to exclude all other stimuli, including visual.

This, said Tolhurst, is a condition "poorly tolerated" by both human and subhuman species. Few persons have ever experienced it.

"It is truly an eerie first experience," he wrote, "to be in a situation where one can hear one's own heart beat clearly, the vertebrae grate upon each other as one rotates his head from side to side, and where each breath is most apparent, both upon inhalation and exhalation, no matter how one may try to breathe easily.

dear abby

Stiff on Drinkers

DEAR ABBY: My husband is the head of a large corporation. He does not drink hard liquor, but very few people know this because at cocktail parties he takes one drink and pretends to sip it all evening.

Now he watches his junior executives' drinking habits very carefully, and they are promoted or fired accordingly. Anyone who takes more than two drinks is dropped or passed over for promotion no matter how good a job he does.

I feel that my husband should have a talk with the man and give him a chance to cut down. He says: "No, once a drunk always a drunk." He says it takes guts not to drink in today's society, and he needs men with guts to run the business right. What is your opinion? Concerned

DEAR CONCERNED: If everyone who takes more than two drinks is (as your husband states) a "drunk" — there are a lot of drunks effectively running a lot of businesses.

I agree, it takes guts not to drink in today's society, but a man who takes a drink publicly and "pretends" to sip it so no one will know he doesn't drink, is lacking in guts himself. If guts is the issue, the alcoholic who said: "No thanks, I'm an alcoholic" has far more guts than your holier-than-thou abstainer.

DEAR ABBY: I have a very good friend I have known for a long time, and I wouldn't intentionally hurt her for the world. She and her husband are about 15 years older than my husband and I, but we went around together and were all good friends.

The whole mess started when her husband started making advances and trying to paw me. I slapped his face once (real hard) in the kitchen when he tried to get fresh, but that didn't stop him. He came over to my house one night knowing my husband wasn't there. I wouldn't let him in, so he climbed in through the window, and I ran him off with a broom.

In desperation, I told his wife, and do you know what she said to me? "I know his faults, but I love him anyway. You were very cruel to tell me and I will never forgive you for it!"

Our friendship has cooled off a lot since then, but at least it did put a stop to all his funny business. Was I wrong in telling my friend about her husband? — Broken Friendship.

DEAR BROKEN: Yes. You did it the hard way. You should have told your husband.

DEAR ABBY: A reader wrote to tell you that he (or she) had read somewhere that when a couple becomes engaged and the boy doesn't give the girl an engagement ring, but buys her a fancy wedding ring instead, she can wear it as her "engagement" ring. The reader asked if that was proper.

You replied, "Not in MY book. A wedding ring should not be worn until AFTER the wedding."

Well, Abby, in Switzerland, when the couple becomes engaged, the boy gives the girl a plain gold wedding ring which she wears on her RIGHT hand. After the wedding she wears the ring on her LEFT hand. Sincerely yours, MRS. S.W.

DEAR MRS. S.W.: Live and learn! I appreciate your setting me straight. You and I have learned from different "books" . . . each is correct, so when in Rome (or Switzerland) do what the natives do.

Short Shrift

COLOGNE, West Germany (WNS) — Gunther Weber, 26, is threatening to sue because he was fired as an accountant when he insisted on wearing shorts to work. "If lady stenographers can wear hot pants and mini skirts on the job, men should be permitted shorts," he said.

They Don't Smell Like Real Thing

Call me a slave to tradition, but each year I insist upon having a real Christmas tree. The kind that gets sap all over your hands and drops long needles that clog up the vacuum cleaner.

To me there is nothing very festive about assembling a box of Christmas tree. I know that they are fireproof, more perfect than nature, and a saving in the long run, but they don't smell like Christmas trees. It's the sap that smells. Of course, sap gets all over your hands and we're back where we started.

Humoring my hang-up doesn't include assisting with the purchase, however. After all, no one helps senile uncles look for toothpaste caps. As soon as little forests start sprouting around the shopping centre, I whip on my longjohns for another lonely quest. My system involves starting with the boy scouts 10 miles away and working back toward home, past the Women of the Moose and the Baptist Church.

Last year the routing was similar, but the temperature was zero when I set out. Six lots and two hours later, the mercury had tumbled to 10 below, and the only might-do-in-a-pinch trees were $3 a foot. My eyelashes were frozen together by then, and I'd lost all feeling in my left foot. Ending up at my last hope, the Baptist Church, I had to decide finally whether to get an $8.50 Douglas fir that was tall enough but shaped like a mushroom, or a gorgeous seven-foot Scotch pine that was $12.50. Impetuously, I bought the Scotch pine, wondering vaguely how I'd serve the Christmas meatloaf.

By the time I got home, my family had evidently given up hope of seeing me alive again and were getting ready to go out to dinner.

"Well, I got one."

"Another sticky one?"

"That's sap."

"What's 'sap'?"

Ask your mother, she's one.

Court Order Sought to Block Fallers

VANCOUVER (CP) — MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. applied Wednesday for a court order to restrain 35 fallers at its Franklin River logging division from breaching their contract with the company.

The fallers and the company have been in a dispute over pricing practices for several months, resulting in several work stoppages at company operations on Vancouver Island.

The fallers took part in a wildcat strike some weeks ago, but are now back at work. Negotiations between the company and the International Woodworkers of America on the pricing dispute are continuing.

Vice-chairman Robert Bonner of MacMillan Bloedel said the company was forced to ask for the court order because "a handful of fallers, in a mood of deliberate anarchy, were closing down woods operations, discrediting their union and jeopardizing the jobs of several thousand loggers and mill workers."

The company last week reached agreement with the IWA on local issues which had disrupted log production at Eve River and Kelsey Bay on Vancouver Island for several weeks.

FLORIDA SNOW entranced kids, but it didn't last. Snowballs came courtesy of ice-making machine, which dumped five tons of ice chips on the landscape ... despite 80-degree temperatures. Kids, who were tipped off in advance, came equipped with toques and mittens. The man-made Miami blizzard survived for several hours in spite of the heat. (AP wirephoto).

Pulp Mill Share Sought in N.Y. Suit

NEW YORK (CP) — Trial of a suit brought by a Saskatchewan-registered company for an accounting of and participation in the proceeds from Prince Albert Pulp Mill Ltd. has been adjourned until Jan. 3 in New York Supreme Court.

The suit has been brought by Sask River Forest Co., Ltd., against Parsons and Whittemore Inc., a New York engineering-management firm. Sask River claims that it was a party to a joint venture with Parsons and Whittemore in establishing the kraft pulp mill at Prince Albert, Sask., and asks for 50 per cent of any proceeds from the project, less a proportionate share of the expenses.

Justice Irving Saypol adjourned the case Tuesday after a week of testimony and the entering of 129 exhibits by Sask River, a firm headed by D. Keith Malcolm of Vancouver.

The lawsuit, which had its origins in 1966, has come to trial after passing through a variety of preliminary stages and legal moves, including an unsuccessful appeal by Parsons and Whittemore to the Appelate Court for dismissal.

In papers filed in the case, Sask River has traced negotiations that began in August, 1964, between Malcolm and Karl F. Landegger, president of Parsons and Whittemore. The firm says these led to negotiations with then-premier Ross Thatcher, the late J. M. Cuelenaere, then natural resources minister, and Canadian Pacific Railway officials.

These negotiations, Sask River says, resulted in a commitment from the provincial officials to make the provincial forest reserve available to supply pulp wood for the Prince Albert mill and to have the province guarantee borrowing needed to build the mill.

100 Rabid Animals Destroyed

AURORA, Ont. (CP) — More than 100 rabid animals have been destroyed in this community 25 miles north of Metropolitan Toronto within the last two months, a Humane Society official says.

Alexandra Parry, director of the York Region Humane Society, said the society has been trying for a month to get the federal agriculture department to set up an animal clinic in the community.

"I realize the wheels of government run slowly, but this community has an urgent problem."

Four persons have been attacked by rabid animals in the last week. Only one, a 14-year-old boy, has been infected. He is undergoing 14 days of stomach vaccinations.

Mrs. Parry said foxes, skunks and muskrats have been roaming through the streets of town.

Shelved TV Bill Hints at Concession

By PAUL WHITELAW
Special to the Times

QUEBEC CITY — A potentially bitter and embarrassing public battle between Ottawa and Quebec over control of cable television was headed off temporarily — and perhaps permanently — Wednesday as the Bourassa government revealed its pre-Christmas legislative plans.

With only five days of debate left before adjournment of the National Assembly, a schedule of legislation which is to come to a final third vote before the holidays does not include three bills regulating the communications field including cable TV.

If the contentious cable TV bill, claiming jurisdiction over a field that is already regulated by Ottawa's Canadian Radio-Television Commission, is not passed before adjournment, a special government order will be required to put it on the order paper in the new session.

The cabinet is reported to have no such plans, although there was no official announcement from the government about the bill's future.

The decision to shelve the contentious legislation, even temporarily, was totally unexpected.

Quebec Communications Minister Jean-Paul a l'Allier announced last month that the legislation would likely be passed before adjournment and that "the regulations will take four to six weeks to produce after that."

Control over Cable TV, the first step in plans to eventually seek jurisdiction over a wide-range of modern communications, has been billed as a priority by the Bourassa government.

WAIT-AND-SEE

A spokesman for the federal Secretary of State, Gerard Pelletier, noted last month that his department was maintaining a wait-and-see attitude. He suggested that Quebec might pass the bill and keep it inactive, but on the books, as a weapon for future negotiations with Ottawa on other issues.

However, if Quebec attempted to implement its plans to control the 250 federally-licenced cable TV firms in the province, the issue seemed destined for the Supreme Court — and the bitterness that would accompany the first federal attempt to have legislation passed by the Bourassa government declared unconstitutional.

The effectiveness of both the federal and planned provincial regulatory agencies could have been undermined by a court decision dividing up spheres of influence, and both governments would be inevitably embarrassed by public battling.

There have been growing objections from some Liberal MPs to Quebec's seemingly nationalistic plans in the communications field.

However, some observers suggested that if the communications legislation hasn't been shelved merely for lack of time, months of behind-the-scenes manoeuvring between federal and provincial officials over the TV issue may have finally paid off.

Quebec, it was speculated, may have extracted some agreement on communications or even an unrelated matter by deciding to proceed more diplomatically with its quest for increased communications jurisdiction.

Whatever the case, Quebec certainly wouldn't decide simply to abandon its much-publicized cable TV bill unless the government decides it can help it achieve other important aims.

Child Shielded

BROCHTHAUSEN (AP) — A mine blew off a young mother's legs as she fled East Germany with her year-old baby Monday night, but she shielded the child from the blast. Six residents ran into the border minefield and pulled the 21-year-old mother, her husband and the baby to safety.

Protection, Improvement Urged For Gorge 'Natural Features'

Three municipalities and the Capital Regional District are urged in a technical committee report to adopt in principle the concept of improving and protecting natural features of the Gorge Waterway.

The recommendation was made by the Gorge Waterway technical committee, comprised of local municipal officials. The regional board tabled the report Wednesday until it heard from Victoria, Saanich and Esquimalt.

The committee also recommended an "in-depth study" be made of various aspects of Saanich's Gorge Waterway Report.

To protect the existing natural features of tree growth and open space, the report recommended:

- When sizeable tracts of land are to be developed, the municipality requre the developer to adopt a waterfrong setback of up to 100 feet, or the municipality acquire an oper to adopt a waterfront able strip as a pedestrian way;
- When an owner wants to subdivide land or consolidate parcels, the approving officer be requested to require dedication as right-or way a strip "of suitable width" along the waterfront.

Heroin Trader Guilty

A 20-year-old city man was found guilty in County Court Wednesday of possession of heroin for the purposes of trafficking.

Judge M. L. T. Drake remanded Allan Myron Blocka to Dec. 29 for sentence

Blocka was arrested at 11:20 p.m. last Feb. 2 by two drug squad officers who were waiting for him at 1337 Grant St.

Pioneer Teacher Dies

Sophie Hiscocks, a native Victorian who began teaching in 1904, died here Tuesday at 86.

Miss Hiscocks taught in Keremeos, Victoria, Rossland and Cranbrook before returning to Victoria to teach at Sir James Douglas School in 1913.

She retired in 1945 but continued to teach children of many of her former pupils at her family home on Trutch Street.

She was predeceased by a brother and is survived by a niece, Mrs. Margaret Wetherill of Vancouver.

NUDES TIRE TIRE FIRM

LONDON (UPI) — The British branches of the Italian Pirelli tire company has scrapped its traditional nude pin-up calendars for 1972. Next year's calendars feature fully clothes girls in a 1920s setting.

"We believe the modern male is bored with over-exposure to nudity and secretly longs for the return of the fragile, ornate women of the past," a company spokesman said.

REGINA KEEPS MONDAY SHUT

REGINA (CP) — Regina electors voted overwhelmingly Wednesday to keep stores closed on Mondays.

The issue had been bitterly debated for months since a brief asking for six days of shopping a week was submitted to city council by the three major department stores in the city.

Partial returns after the polling office closed for the night showed a vote of 13,270 to 8,337 in favor of keeping store hours unchanged.

The result left Regina as one of the last major cities in Canada where stores are open only five days a week.

Opponents of the change had argued that Monday shopping would mean that small merchants might be forced out of business because the extra hours would be a financial and physical burden on small stores.

Unions had said that a six-day opening "by extending hours and contributing to the hiring of more part-timers, in an industry that already has a disproportionately high number, would further undermine earnings and conditions already less than average."

Supporters of the proposed change had said that the city should "step out of the dark ages into the light of a modern commercial world."

SHARK CAUGHT

CALGARY (CP) — Mervin Mackiw, 44, of Edmonton was convicted in provincial court Wednesday of cheating at cards.

Judge F. A. Thurgood was told by RCMP officers they observed Mackiw peeking at cards and taking a second deal where only one was allowed.

He was remanded until today for sentencing.

One man involved in the game said he was about even until Mackiw joined the game, after which he lost about $400.

A second player testified he lost between $60 and $70 to Mackiw.

Teacher Vote Ordered By Labor Minister

EDMONTON (CP) — Labor Minister Bert Hohol announced Wednesday that he has directed the board of industrial relations to conduct a vote among teachers who are on strike in the Bow Valley School Authorities Association.

Dr. Hohol said the teachers will be asked to vote on the latest offer from the association. The results would be made public as soon as they were available.

The 513 teachers went on strike Nov. 29, keeping 12,000 children out of class in the counties of Wheatland and Mountain View, the school divisions of Three Hills and Drumheller Valley, and school boards in Banff, Canmore and Hanna.

Rate Deadline

EDMONTON (CP) — Insurance companies have until Jan. 1 to file the rates they propose to charge for compulsory automobile insurance which comes into effect in Alberta April 1, 1972, Attorney-General Merv Leitch announced Wednesday.

The rates must be filed with the Alberta Automobile Insurance Board, set up at the last session of the legislature to ensure that Alberta residents will be able to buy insurance at reasonable rates.

Bridge Collapses

BENTLEY, Alta. (CP) — Damage was estimated at $100,000 when a bridge on a country road collapsed.

Police said a large truck carrying a heavy bulldozer just made it across the 150-foot bridge before it caved in. The road is not a main route but is used by school buses. Police said the bridge probably will be out until spring.

Chief to Star

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Royal Winnipeg Ballet is to present its version of the Ecstasy of Rita Joe in three performances at Vancouver's Queen Elizabeth Theatre, Jan. 19, 21 and 23.

The ballet, adapted from the play by George Ryga of Summerland, B.C., is choreographed by Norbert Vesak and features actor Dan George as Rita Joe's father. Anna Maria de Gorriz plays Rita Joe.

Labor Council Seeks Scalp of WCB Chief

MOOSE JAW (CP) — The New Democratic Party government of Saskatchewan was criticized Tuesday night by the Moose Jaw and District Labor Council, a branch of the Canadian Labor Congress.

A report to the council on the recent NDP provincial convention which said in part that "for workers to sit back and take the attitude that they don't have to worry now that the NDP is in power, is a crucial mistake," was adopted at a council meeting.

The report dealt with the rejection by the convention of a resolution calling for the immediate dismissal of Walter Erb, chairman of the Workmen's Compensation Board.

Erb was appointed in 1965 by the former Liberal government as chairman of the board for 10 years. He had quit the NDP cabinet in 1961 to protest the government's implementation of the Medical Care Insurance Plan.

Barry Widenmaier, the council's convention delegate who wrote the report, said Erb's dismissal was a crucial issue at the convention.

"To me the fact that Walter Erb has not been replaced is a sell-out by the NDP government. For the government to say it is a touchy issue or that it is conducting an investigation is to slap the faces of the thousands of workers who voted, worked and gave money in the June election" to elect the NDP.

Widenmaier said the government's rejection of the resolution suggests "that we have learned another lesson about the practical politician . . . workers have always had to fight for everything they've ever won."

Land Pattern Urged to Avoid Future Disaster

ROOME
. . . 'avert costly errors'

NORTH COWICHAN — Ald. Jim Roome urged council Wednesday to form a land development pattern for the sprawling municipality.

"In the last two years we have rezoned various properties for a number of different uses and just recently rezoned two large tracts of land for a specific use without any rule of thumb for land use, or projected development concerning the municipality as a whole," Roome said.

Roome said that, although it may not seem too serious at the moment, "in 15 to 20 years the errors in rezoning, resulting from lack of long-range planning, could be a disaster for such a beautiful area.

"We must remind ourselves, that we control a very significant proportion of the land in this valley."

Roome said he is not advocating town planners and associated expenditures but is convinced that with a little professional guidance the municipal staff, council and a few knowledgeable citizens can draw up a development plan and land use program.

GOOD START

"We are already starting to be quite specific about parks within subdivisions, and their acceptability for their proposed area," he noted. "Although this is a good start, it doesn't help the overall outlook."

Roome said it is his contention that "we, as respossible members of local government, must ensure this overall outlook of land use and development is undertaken now. The ultimate importance of our actions now will be measured in the years to come."

Roome, who did not stand for re-election after serving one term, says he plans to run for alderman again next year after he clears up some business matters.

WORKED WELL

He encouraged council to continue to sub-contract work for the public works department.

"I have always been a firm advocate of this, and in as much as it has worked well for us so far, I would ask council not to be satisfied with our present area of sub-let work, but to look carefully at others."

Water connections, pipe laying, road base preparation and sign maintenance are only a few areas that could be looked into, he said.

"It is an indisputable fact that money has been saved by sub-contracting and that private industry can do some jobs considerably better and cheaper than by public work forces," Roome said.

He said the municipality's two engineering studies on the development of the Chemainus River water source and the Maple Bay Road sewage collection and disposal system should not be allowed "to collect dust on our shelves."

"We must continue our reiteration to the regional district that the Chemainus River water source is the supply for the whole district and planning and financing for its development should be done. Securing of easements, right of ways, water licences, etc. should be completed so that when the time comes that this project is required and is financially reasible for the whole area — not just North Cowichan — the financing and construction can be undertaken with minimal delay."

Roome said the Maple Bay sewer system is required now "but obviously the per capita cost makes it impossible now."

Joint Action Proposed On Water

NORTH COWICHAN — North Cowichan council wants to form a joint water board with Duncan early in the new year.

Aldermen formed a water committee Wednesday and will request Duncan to do the same.

Ald. Margaret Robertson, who proposed the resolution, said this morning Cowichan has been trying to form a joint water board for years.

She said she decided on the motion after Duncan Mayor Jim Quaife spoke out in support of the joint board during the election campaign.

Quaife could not be reached for comment.

Mrs. Robertson feels that both municipalities should get together to supply water for the whole community, "especially now that Quaife has spoken out in support of it."

She feels that a study should be started soon.

"Although the ultimate answer is the damming of the Chemainus River for water supply to the valley, it will cost millions and must be done on a regional basis," Mrs. Robertson said.

Court Move Prods Fallers

VANCOUVER (CP) — Fallers at MacMillan Bloedel's Franklin River logging division near Port Alberni decided to return to work today following the company's application on Wednesday for a court injunction to force them back on the job.

A company spokesman could not say if MB was willing to drop the court action.

Robert Bonner, MB vice-chairman, said the company went to the courts as a last resort because a "handful of fallers, in a mood of anarchy" were closing down the woods operations, discrediting their own union and jeopardizing the jobs of several thousand loggers and millworkers.

The 35 fallers walked off the job on Monday to protest the dismissal of two employees.

Mr. Bonner said no valid grievance exists, adding that "a few people are manufacturing issues for their own purposes and are disrupting production at the cost of wages and jobs for their fellow employees."

Last week, MB and the International Woodworkers of America worked out an interim agreement to get local issues out of the way so that negotiations on standard pricing practices for fallers could be completed.

The IWA had no comment except to say that the local officers were not involved in the decisions to walk off the job or the return to work.

(See earlier story on Page 29.)

Problems Claimed With Voters' List

Several directors on the Capital Regional District board said Wednesday there were problems with the voters list in last Saturday's election.

Salt Spring Island director Marc Holmes said 10 to 15 per cent of the names on the list were not eligible to vote.

He said he attaches no blame to officials but wanted a list with less than this number of ineligible persons.

Metchosin director Ken Rainey and View Royal director Al Beasley said their areas also have problems with voters lists.

Asked later if the 10 to 15 per cent ineligible persons on the voters list are Americans, Holmes said "mostly, yes, but I am concerned with all who are not eligible. Please don't think my remarks anti-American."

Only Canadian citizens, or other British subjects, may vote in local elections — even if their names have inadvertently got on the voters list.

Regional district executive director Dennis Young agreed to review the problem.

Kidney Removed

WINNIPEG (CP)—Surgeons had to remove a transplanted kidney from an unidentified patient Wednesday after a blood clot formed.

The unidentified patient is listed in good condition in Winnipeg General Hospital. The kidney of a Toronto man was flown to Winnipeg by a Canadian Forces jet Tuesday and a team of surgeons spent 4½ hours on the transplant operation.

Men Awarded $8,000 Damages After Crash With Unknown Car

NANAIMO (CP) — Two Nanaimo men have successfully sued the attorney-general of British Columbia for damages under a rarely-used section of the B.C. Motor Vehicle Act.

Mr. Justice G. F. Gregory of B.C. Supreme Court today awarded $8,000 in general damages to James Milliken and James Thomas.

The two men sued the attorney-general for unspecified compensation for injuries suffered when the car in which they were passengers was forced off the Island Highway five miles north of here by an unidentified vehicle.

Mr. Justice Gregory and a jury of six men and two women were told that the accident Nov. 12, 1969, was caused when the car in which the two men were riding, driven by Daniel Power, now of Newfoundland, had to swerve as a small foreign car cut sharply in front of them.

Power lost control and the car overturned in a ditch.

B.C. Attorney-General Leslie Petersen was named in the suit under serction 108 of the Motor Vehicle Act. Under this section, provision for compensation is made in a case where the driver of a car causing an accident cannot be identified.

TRANSIT BOOSTS BUDGET

NANAIMO, (CP) — Nanaimo regional district board has adopted a provisional budget of $713,697 for 1972, an increase of $150,200 over its provisional budget for this year.

It calls for tax requisitions amounting to $543,636 of which $270,208 would be contributed by all member areas and $273,427 by specified areas.

The board's administrative function has a provisional budget of $151,660, up $31,000 and its planning function a provisional budget of $142,320, up slightly. Cost of both functions devolves on all member areas.

Largest single item in the provisional budget, adopted Tuesday night, is $210,844 for the regional transit system, cost of which evolves only on the Greater Nanaimo area. This compares with a 1971 figure of $197,819. However, a $46,500 deficit from 1970 has been wiped out, and a $1,500 surplus is forecast for this year.

The transit system is expected to yield $52,000 in revenue next year.

Under administration, the major item is $49,500 for salaries, up from $40,000 this year. directors' remuneration is set at $19,000

Prairie Minimum Wage Increased

REGINA (CP) — Saskatchewan's new minimum wage of $1.70 an hour will go into effect Jan. 2 with a further five cents an hour increase effective July 1.

In making the announcement Wednesday, Labor Minister Gordon Snyder said the new minimum rate will apply to workers in and outside of cities and will be the same for all ages. Current minimum wage rates are $1.50 an hour in cities and $1.40 an hour in rural areas.

Quiz Kids Set For Final Test

Vancouver Island's section of the television quiz Reach for the Top went into the semi-final stage at the McPherson Playhouse Wednesday.

Oak Bay senior secondary schoool defeated Cowichan senior secondary school with a score of 435 to 285. Nanaimo senior secondary school defeated Mount Douglas school 355 to 160.

Tonight Oak Bay will meet Nanaimo in the final Island contest.

If You Can't See—Ask Someone

TORONTO (CP) — Dr. Samuel Genensky doesn't let his near-blindness deter him from travelling everywhere alone or working at a complex and demanding job with the United States "think-tank" firm, the Rand Corporation.

In fact, Dr. Genensky, who is totally blind in one eye and has limited vision in the other, eschews all the traditional symbols associated with the blind.

He never uses a white cane, preferring instead to carry a pair of powerful field glasses in a case slung around his shoulders and a powerful magnifying glass in his pocket.

And he gained a PhD in mathematics reading normal textbooks, not ones written in braille.

The California mathematician was in Toronto Wednesday to tell the meeting of the American Academy of Optometry about a closed circuit television device developed by a fellow worker at Rand Corp. that enables the almost-blind to write and to read books.

With 20-750 vision in his usable eye, Dr. Genensky must stand within 20 feet of an object that a sighted person could see at 750 feet. Even then he can only see a recognizable outline; for clear vision he said his usable eye has a rating of nearer 20-2,000.

NOT AFRAID TO ASK

But, he thinks nothing of taking his field glasses from their case to look at a sign or a traffic light. If that's not enough, he asks someone.

"It doesn't embarrass me—you just have to make up your mind that it's more important to see than to worry how you look to others."

Dr. Genensky lost his sight immediately after birth, but his parents raised him never to use his near-blindness as an excuse. If he failed at something, it was because everyone fails occasionally, not because he couldn't see.

In his early childhood he spent his first eight years of schooling at so-called "sight-saving" classes in his native Bedford, Mass., then spent a year at a school for the blind.

Then he got into the public school system and worked his way up through high school, university and finally to is PhD by using the "nose-to-page" technique of reading.

About six years ago Dr. Genensky and his colleagues at Rand began discussing ways of making it easier for him to read and write.

Finally, Dr. Genensky said a fellow mathematician, David Grey, suggested closed-circuit television.

The present system uses a TV camera, set vertically above a frame placed on the desk and a monitor. Movable tracks on the frame allow a book or writing pad to be moved easily in either direction to bring the desired portion under the focused camera lens. The image can be flashed on to the screen in black on white or the reverse.

Magnification of the image can be altered also.

LANCERS STALLED

VANCOUVER (CP) — Five British Soldiers and a civilian arrived here this week after completion of the first stage of their planned trip from the Arctic to the tip of South America.

The six men left Anchorage, Alaska, Dec. 3 in a bid to make the first trip from Alaska to the tip of South America entirely by land vehicle.

Leader Capt. Gavin Thompson said the group hopes to complete the 14,000 mile trip in about five months.

Also on the trip are Capt. Peter Barry, 27, Sgt. M. H. Cross, 24, and Troopers Michael Webb, 21, and David Fletcher, 19 all of the 17th-21st Lancers, and publisher Timothy Nicholson.

The group will stay in Vancouver for about a week while waiting for the repair of one of their two vehicles damaged in a collision with a truck on the Alaska Highway

Capt Barry said the toughest part of the journey will come in the Darien Gap, a 250-mile section of jungle and swamp in Panama.

But 75 British Army Engineers and scientists will meet the group there and help them to travel through the jungle, Capt Barry said.

The engineers will build about 120 temporary bridges for the trek through the 250 miles, Capt. Barry said, adding that the group expects to take about three months to travel the distance.

The trip is being sponsored by the British Museum, several exploration societies, the British Army and Air Force, a British car firm and other commercial concerns and the governments of Panama and Colombia. It is expected to cost about $300,000.

The group hopes that the journey will provide the spark that will lead to another attempt to complete the Pan American highway, so far stymied by the Darien barrier.

PEERCE 'DEBUTS' ON BROADWAY

NEW YORK (AP) — Tenor Jan Peerce, in a Broadway show for the first time, is delighted with the reality and inspirational quality of his part as Tevye in Fiddler on the Roof. In fact, he likes it better than opera.

Peerce, 63, began his long and distinguished career as a vocalist with dance bands, then sang at Radio City Music Hall from 1933 to 1939 and has been at the Metropolitan Opera since 1941. He opened Tuesday night in Fiddler, his first Broadway show, and got a standing ovation.

Peerce, the seventh Broadway Tevye, has signed a six-month contract.

"I hate to sound like a rebel, but this is even more rewarding than opera," he said after his second performance, the Wednesday matinee.

Peerce saw Fiddler 14 times since its Broadway opening Sept. 22, 1964, and once in London, before he undertook it this year in a pre-Broadway summer stock workout.

"Of course, I know the character ever since my childhood," said the Jewish New York native. "I had it read to me and explained to me and my background is Tevye."

Stud Backers Get Ultimatum

RED LAKE, Ont. (CP) — Dr. Michael Gloster and 26 others today pleaded guilty to violating an Ontario ban on studded tires and were given two weeks to comply with the law.

Judge J. V. Gregeau, while expressing sympathy with the use of studded tires, said the law, implemented this year barring the studs, must be obeyed.

"I would have loved to have had studded tires yesterday," said the judge, who travelled over an icy road to reach this town.

"That road was pretty slippery."

"There are a lot of laws we don't agree with, but in the meantime, we should comply with the laws until we get them changed."

HEADS PROTEST

Dr. Gloster, chairman of a group called the Citizens' Committee for Studdd Tirs, said earlier he's prepared to go to jail rather than pay a fine, normally $20 and costs, but refused Thursday to say what he will do.

Judge Fregeau, of Kenora, said he'll return in two weeks.

"Those of you who have removed your studs, I'll deal with in one way. Those of you who haven't, I'll deal with in another."

Of the 31 summonsed to appear today on the charge, two paid the fine earlier and did not go to court. Two charges were withdrawn.

CRITICIZES SOUTH

Dr. Gloster, 39, a general medical practitioner, earlier said the studded-tire issue was just another example of a law made in Toronto that doesn't suit conditions in the north.

"We're going to plead guilty to this thing because we don't have the time to fight it as a legal battle."

Dr. Gloster, a native of London, England, who came to this remote northwestern Ontario town 12 years ago, declined to say how many supporters of studded tires would choose jail.

If he goes to jail the district of Red Lake will be left with four doctors.

The group says the ban, which went into effect in November across the province, may be suitable for urban southern Ontario roads, but not for northern winters.

NECESSARY FOR SAFETY

In this mining town of 2,200, located 200 miles northeast of Winnipeg, supporters say studded tires are necessary for safety and don't damage snowpacked roads.

Nude Photo Investigated

ST. JOHN'S, Nfld. (CP) — Police Chief Alan Dwyer said today charges by a St. John's woman that she was paid $600 for showing semi-nude pictures of herself to welfare officials are under investigation.

Steve Neary, social services minister, said he asked the police to investigate after the woman threw the pictures on his desk Wednesday.

He said department files showed no record of a $600 payment to the woman.

The incident occurred during a meeting between Mr. Neary and welfare recipients who asked that their January assistance cheques be issued before Christmas.

Mr. Neary turned the request down on the grounds that children of recipients could be left without food next month if the money was all spent on Christmas preparations.

Rebel Prof. Plans Own Urban Research

TORONTO (CP) — Harvey Lithwick, the academic who flirted briefly with government bureacracy, is setting up an agency to undertake what he believes his one-time employer cannot accomplish.

The Carleton University professor, who drafted the outline for a federal urban affairs department in 1970, now is raising funds for an independent research institute.

He said in an interview his proposals met with insurmountable opposition and resistance from within the civil service, and he quit his post as assistant secretary of the new urban affairs secretariat to return to his teaching job.

He had hoped that the federal government could come to grips with, and perhaps solve Canada's urban problems.

"It just can't be done within the existing civil service structure," the Harvard-trained economist said.

Lithwick's blueprint for the urban affairs department included establishment of "a giant federal shopping basket for urban aid."

"All Central Mortgage and Housing (Corporation) would have to do would be to hand the money out. The provinces would each be alloted a certain amount of money, but that money would be theirs to use on any program they wanted."

He said Urban Affairs Minister Robert Andres gave him "a free hand. But when it came to standing up to CMHC and changing its function, there was nobody standing behind me."

His proposed research institute, for which he hopes to raise $50,000, could take on independent policy-making projects, he said.

Its findings, he said, would be free from government interference and vested interest groups and if its findings were properly publicized, the institute could become a powerful voice in Canada.

YULE CONCERT SET

The 25-voice Amity Singers will be heard in a concert of music for Christmas Friday at 8 p.m. at the Church of Our Lord, Humboldt Street.

Musical director George Corwin has chosen, in addition to carols, some lesser-known works related to the season.

Two settings of the Magnificat by Baroque composers Heinrich Schuetz and Carl Pachelbel are included. Both settings are for double chorus.

Concert proceeds will go to the church's organ restoration project and the Amity Singers' scholarship fund.

Hymn Book Best-Seller

TORONTO (CP) — The new hymn book published jointly by the United and Anglican churches a few months ago has sold out all 185,000 copies of its first printing.

The churches announced today in a release that a second printing should be ready by March and there already are orders for 20,000 copies.

The new book, first published in October, was prepared by a committee of laity and clergy who examined 10,000 hymns in selecting the 507 for the book.

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want.

He maketh me to lie down in green pastures: He leadeth me beside the still waters.

He restoreth my soul: He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for His name's sake.

Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil; for thou art with me: thy rod and thy staff they comfort me.

Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies: thou anointest my head with oil; my cup runneth over.

Surely goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life: and I will dwell in the house of the Lord for ever.

PSALM 23.

YOUR HEALTH: Dr. Walter Alvarez

More on Crib Deaths

In a crib death, an infant goes to sleep apparently healthy and some hours later the mother finds him dead. Many hundreds of these infants have been autopsied, and the pathologist who performed the autopsy, and physicians who made a particular study of the disease, still don't know why these infants died so suddenly and unexpectedly. Some have theories, but they have not yet convinced their fellow researchers that their theories are correct.

I just got a letter from Saul Goldberg, president of the International Guild for Infant Survival. I regret that when I wrote my last article on sudden infant death, I did not know about this fine organization. I read that it has eight affiliates and 15 regional representatives across the country, plus members, contributos and correspondents in the nine foreign countries. Goldberg tells me that they were the first organization to concern themselves with the well-being of the terribly distressed and bereaved parents.

This is so very important, because having a child die so suddenly can be one of the most distressing things that can happen to parents. They have no chance to prepare themselves emotionally for the loss of the child. Also, they so often feel guilty and blame themselves in some way for the death.

Every time I write a column based on an article about crib deaths which interested me and seemed to throw some light on the problem, several people have written to say that they did not agree with something I had said. They point out we still do not know for sure why these children go to sleep apparently well, and are later found dead.

It is certainly hoped that research continues until a definite answer is obtained. As Goldberg says, the best way I can help is to call attention to the several organizations which are doing research in this field. The mental suffering of the parents is so great that every effort should be made by good and generous people to help forward the research that is being done to get an answer to the problem.

ENJOYING FOOD ON A DIABETIC DIET

I was just looking through an attractive book which will doubtless give pleasure and comfort to thousands of diabetics who are tired of a monotonous diet. "Enjoy Food on a Diabetic Diet" was written by Edith M. Meyer, who is herself a diabetic, and has spent a lot of time studying the food values of a wide range of dishes she used to eat before her illness was diagnosed. And she has experimented extensively in her own kitchen, adapting some recipes to fit into a diabetic diet and rediscovering some old favorite foods that needed no change.

The result of all this study is a cook book written especially for "mild" diabetics — who perhaps first developed diabetes in middle life and can control the disease with an oral drug or just diet alone, and who constitute a large majority of those with this disease.

There are more than 200 recipes and a lot of fine advice on shopping, entertaining, eating out, planning menus, and minding the budget. Miss Meyer's main idea is to make the approved foods taste delicious and to make them more acceptable to diabetics.

'Living' Decorations For Festive Season

Living flowers and plants will be highlighted for home decorations this season as more of us take the path back to reality.

Artificial decorations last for years, but need cleaning, storing and refreshing when brought out again. Even then we look for something fresh from garden or woodland to make them come alive.

The smallest garden will have something we can gather to make either an exquisite centrepiece or tiny place markers for Christmas festivities.

A fat green or red candle with a circle of trailing pieces of variegated vinca, euonymus or ivy; or berried twigs of cotoneaster with its green leaves, pyracantha or holly.

You need very few pieces if the candle is anchored into a suitably colored bowl for safety and the plant material lies around the candle's base.

Glass custard cups, little glass jars two inches high, or right for making individual bouquets at the place settings.

According to the garden material you have, you may do all the bouquets alike to match the centrepiece, or each one using different flowers and plants. Don't mix too many in one container.

★ ★ ★

To last for about half an hour of light, each container is fitted with a small candle such as used on cakes, to be lit just as the guests are seated.

Use small stems of yellow winter jasmine, a few sweet scented violets, three primula blossoms, twigs and leaves of berried shrubs or simple three-colored leaves from some special shrub.

Keep away from conifer twigs with lighted candles on the table though we older folks were all brought up safely enough with real lighted candles on real Christmas trees and live table decorations too.

Water in the containers will keep the flowers and twigs fresh even after the tiny candles have burned down. Don't let them smoulder among the leaves.

For after Christmas when a change of color is welcome, do your table with flowering tips of winter heathers. Regardless of current weather, winter varieties will be blooming. Those with gold foliage offer a change with the dark green.

Many gardens have a patch of rich green moss which alarms the gardener as a rule, but for table arrangements it gives an atmosphere of realism, linking the centrepiece with the outdoors by holding the short-stemmed flowers or pieces of shrub in its moisture.

Remove it from the soil in a layer to fill a colored plate; or lay it on a mirror for reflected light.

In a dish or bowl, soak the moss with water and arrange the stems artistically using the moss as a holder. A pencil will make holes for the soft stems, while stiff ones are easily inserted.

The mirrored arrangement is suitable for creating a circle of berried holly or cotoneaster with a stumpy candle anchored in the centre.

SOLUTION FRIDAY

TRAIL OF SHELLS LED TO CULPRIT

MENLO PARK, Calif. (UPI) — Patrolman Bradley Jones had little trouble in solving the theft at Head's Market. He just followed a trail of peanut shells.

Jones traced the shells about two blocks where they ended at a door.

The officer knocked and an 18-year-old answered. The youth denied any knowledge of the theft. However, he could not explain where he got about 25 pounds of peanuts and a large stock of popcorn.

Two younger boys were also implicated.

The Bridge Expert

By FRED KARPIN

It goes without saying that one cannot be a winner in a bridge game unless he holds a reasonable share of the aces, kings, queens, and jacks that are floating around on each deal. Nevertheless, there are days when one does not hold his fair share of the high cards, and yet can emerge victorious because of his proper utilization of low cards.

In today's deal, for example, South arrived at an 11-trick contract with but 20 high-card points. But, by proper management of his low cards, he fulfilled his contract.

North-South vulnerable. North deals.

The bidding:

Opening lead: King of ◊.

On the lead of the diamond king, East played the queen. This play guaranteed the possession of the jack (except if the queen were a singleton) and commanded West to underlead his ace at trick two. West dutifully obliged, and the second trick was captured by East's diamond jack. To trick three East led a low spade, South's ace winning.

A club was then led to dummy's ace, after which a club was returned, South ruffing with his five-spot. Next came the king of hearts to dummy's ace, and a third club was ruffed by South's queen of trumps.

The six of trumps was now led to the board's ten, and a fourth club lead was ruffed with declarer's seven-spot. When West followed suit with the club king on this trick, dummy's ten of clubs had just become the sole surviving club in the deck.

Declarer now led his carefully-preserved three of trumps to the board's four-spot. On the established ten of clubs he then discarded his losing queen of spades. The rest of the tricks belonged to him.

Had declarer gotten careless by ruffing any of the three club leads off dummy with the three of hearts (or had he led the three in order to get to dummy for the ruffing of the clubs), he would have gone down. Had he not saved the three of trumps, then he would not have been able to utilize dummy's four of hearts as an entry for the cashing of dummy's established fifth club.

Thus, by careful management, South brought home a precarious contract.

CP Rail Exhibit Jumps Track

LONDON (CP) — Canadian Pacific took to the tracks of British Rail Tuesday to display its technique of fitting automobiles for railway travel.

But the exhibition came to a sudden stop after only a few yards when the car jumped the tracks and settled slowly into the heavy gravel beside the rail line.

Tim Shepherd, the CP official who was driving the automobile — station wagon with retractable locomotive wheels front and rear — said the derailment had been caused by an "acute curve in the rail line."

Spectators waited an hour while the car was jacked up and placed back on the tracks for completion of the display.

A spokesman for CP Rail said the vehicle was not here to promote sale of such units, but British Rail had expressed interest in its possible use as a bus on lines threatened with closure.

Three Held in London Ambush

LONDON (AP) — British detectives, hunting the men who tried to kill the Jordanian ambassador to Britain, detained two men at London airport today as they tried to fly to the Arab world.

The two unidentified men were taken for questioning to Kensington police station a few blocks from where the ambush occurred Wednesday.

Scotland Yard said the men were picked up as they were trying to board a BOAC jetliner headed for Beirut.

Minutes later, police reported a third man was detained at Gatwick Airport south of London, where planes take off for Europe.

The first two men caught walked into an armed camp at Heathrow Airport, the busiest in Europe. Swarms of detectives were on the alert for guerrillas. Others were guarding three Jordanian princes, leaving for home on a Royal Jordanian Airlines jet.

Scotland Yard detained the two men and then halted the BOAC plane as it was taxiing toward the runway. All 108 passengers were taken off, questioned and searched. Police checked luggage for bombs or guns.

The airport disruption was part of a country-wide search for the attackers who riddled Ambassador Zaid al-Rifai's limousine with sub-machine-gun fire. Rifai was shot in the hand in the ambush.

Fearful that Palestinian guerrillas might try to kill King Hussein of Jordan's two small sons, leaving for Amman on Christmas holidays from their English boarding school, police provided a bodyguard. Detectives held the royal children by the shoulder as they boarded the plane.

The king's 32-year-old brother Prince Mohammed, who carries his own sub-machine-gun at home but is not allowed to arm himself in Britain, also was led into the plane by watchful police.

The departure of the three Arab princes was one of the strictest security operations ever mounted at London's Heathrow Airport.

Quiet Confuses Santo Domingo

SANTA DOMINGO (AP) — The streets of this often turbulent capital of the Dominican Republic have been so quiet lately that even critics are having an occasional kind word for President Joaquin Balaguer.

The civil strife which prevailed throughout much of the 1960s appears, for the time being, to have been replaced by a spirit in which Dominicans are more interested in putting up new buildings than in tearing down existing ones.

An economic boom has been going on for some time, but until recently a continuing wave of politically-motivated killings produced an atmosphere of political uncertainty.

In mid-October Gen. Neit Rafael Nivar Seijas became national police chief, a post regarded as the most important in government after the presidency.

Within six days after taking office, he announced the arrests of one lieutenant and five other policemen in the torture slayings of five youths. He reported a confession from one of the men in the murders of two taxi drivers. He had completed the dismantling of a right-wing vigilante group which was responsible for a number of slayings since its creation last April.

In addition, he has ordered the release of a number of acquitted prisoners who remained in confinement at the direction of police authorities.

The official explanation for police delinquency, given by Balaguer in an interview, is that the offending men were agents of opposition groups attempting to provoke a political crisis.

Diplomats friendly to Balaguer say his achievements have exceeded their expectations. He inherited a lagging economy and a political climate poisoned by the 1965 civil war which claimed some 1,000 lives.

Tokyo Still Ahead

UNITED NATIONS (AP) — Tokyo has more people living within its city limits and in its suburbs than any other city in the world, a UN publication reports.

The new issue of the UN Demographic Yearbook, an 830-page collection of figures analyzing population trends, listed New York as second behind Tokyo in both city and suburban residents.

The most recent count showed Tokyo with 9,005,000 residents in its "City proper," the yearbook says, compared with 7,793,757 for New York City.

If the suburbs are added, Tokyo comes out ahead with 11,454,000 inhabitants compared with 11,448,440 for New York suburbs in New York State.

If the New York suburbs in northeastern New Jersey are included, the total becomes 16,037,395. But a metropolitan area around Tokyo with less than one-third the amount of space, had 20,485,542 inhabitants at last count.

A list of the five largest cities shows London in third place with 7,703,400 residents, Moscow fourth with 6,942,000 and Shanghai fifth with 6,900,000.

FELL HEADS PARENTS' GROUP

Ralph Fell has been elected president of Cedar Hill District Cubs parent group. Laura Lewis is secretary and Theo Waters treasurer.

Proposed Draft Dodger Law Denounced

TORONTO (CP) — Legislation before the United States Senate that would, in effect, give American draft dodgers a second chance was labelled a "political football" Wednesday by a spokesman for the Canadian Council of Churches.

Rev. Robert Gardiner, coordinator of a council program to assist American draft evaders and military deserters coming to Canada, said the legislation had every appearance of originating within the Nixon administration, and he predicted it would prove unacceptable to a vast majority of those it could affect.

Introduced Tuesday by Republican Senator Robert Taft Jr. of Ohio, the bill would allow evaders to return to the U.S. without fear of prosecution if they agree to serve three years, either in the armed forces as aides in hospitals or in a government program to improve cities.

"It really has nothing to do with young Americans in Canada," said Mr. Gardiner. "They are involved, yes. But it's a political football, . . . an attempt to diffuse the issue with the approach of the presidential election next year."

He said the bill would do "absolutely nothing" for deserters who make up what he termed a significant proportion of Americans who have come to Canada to escape military service.

Senator Taft estimated there were 70,000 evaders in Canada, but Mr. Gardiner put the figure at about 45,000.

However, Dee Knight, an editor of Amex, a Toronto magazine for American exiles, said the total would be between 70,000 and 100,000.

Both Mr. Gardiner and Mr. Knight predicted the bill would be viewed as "insulting" by most exiles in Canada.

"It comes nowhere near dealing with the reasons why they came here in the first place," said Mr. Gardiner, a former Anglican chaplain at Michigan State University. "The Vietnam war has not ended."

Mr. Knight, a draft dodger who came to Canada 3½ years ago from San Francisco, estimated deserters now make up nearly half of the exile population.

Mr. Gardiner said the bill, because of its origin, appeared to have a good chance to become law.

But it would apply mainly to "privileged, middle-class" evaders.

He said amnesty for draft dodgers would in many cases mean "freedom to visit grandparents," but "deserters, the people who need this most, aren't getting it."

SITTERS WANT YULE TRAVEL

STEPHENVILLE, Nfld. (CP)—More than 350 students enrolled in the federal Canada Manpower retraining program continued a sit-in at the adult education centre here today to protest the fact they will not receive Christmas holiday travel allowances.

Jack Marshall, Conservative MP for the area, said he brought the matter to the attention of Manpower Minister Otto Lang who assured the MP he will do everything possible to resolve the problem.

Students met with representatives of the local manpower centre Wednesday afternoon and listed a number of demands.

These include a promise there will be no reprisals or loss of pay due to lost time from classes because of the sit-in.

FRUSTRATED MUTE FIRED AT LIBRARY

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — Thomas Alexander Forsyth, 30, of North Vancouver, a deaf mute, was given a suspended sentence Wednesday and placed on probation for two years after pleading guilty to charges of possession and discharging a dangerous weapon.

The charges were laid after he fired 12 shots into the Lynn Valley branch of the North Vancouver Public Library last July. The shots, from a .22-calibre rifle, were fired from an apartment window.

The court ordered Forsyth to turn over his gun collection to his father.

Defence lawyer Al Melvin told the court frustration, because of his isolated condition as a deaf mute, was a factor in the incident.

Fight Hydro Plan

NELSON (CP) — Mayor Louis Maglio and Nelson will fight any attempt by B.C. Hydro to expropriate city-owned land for a $130-million Kootenay canal power project.

Hydro's project includes a three-mile canal beside the Kootenay River to feed Kootenay Lake water into four generators with a capacity of 500,000 kilowatts.

Mayor Maglio said city council rejected Hydro's offer of $21,500 for the city land Hydro needs for the canal. "We don't want money, he said, "we want additional electricity."

Buried Worker Rescued By RCMP, Residents

BROCKLEHURST (CP) — A young construction worker was buried under two feet of dirt for an hour Wednesday after a cave-in collapsed the wals of a sewer trench he was digging.

Four RCMP constables, a British Columbia Telephone Co. employee and several area residents assisted in the rescue of Brian Campbell, about 22, an employee of Buholzer Construction Ltd. of Kamloops.

Another man who had been working with Campbell in the 12-foot-deep trench said they were trying to widen the trench when it caved in.

Campbell was trapped in a semi-sitting position, but was able to walk away from the scene after he was dug out.

Both Campbell and his fellow worker, who suffered shock, were taken to hospital in Kamloops, one mile east of here.

'Cancel Licence'

VANCOUVER (CP) — City Alderman Art Phillips said Wednesday he will ask city council to cancel the business licence of Morgan Publications Ltd., which is conducting a fund-raising campaign for the Lower Mainland Pediatric Society.

At the same time, the British Columbia College of Physicians and Surgeons issued a statement saying pediatricians in the province are in no way associated with the society.

The pediatric society is soliciting funds, which it says will go to a list of children supplied by the Immigrant Reception Centre.

But the centre says it does not lend its name to fund-raising campaigns and does not give out lists of names to anyone.

VANCOUVER (CP) — David Jette, a member of the Greater Vancouver Yuletide Committee, was to appear in court today on a charge of assault following an incident in a Canada Safeway Ltd. store Wednesday.

A spokesman for the committee said Jette and several other committee members were asked by the manager to leave the store where they were distributing leaflets inviting people to a Christmas party and criticizing what the committee considered Safeway's lack of generosity in contributing to the cause.

India Takes Dacca, Extends Ceasefire

From AP-Reuter

The Indian army triumphed on its eastern front today with the unconditional surrender of Pakistan's army in East Pakistan. Then the Indian government ordered its troops on the western front to stop fighting as of Friday night in a unilateral ceasefire.

Pakistan Vows to Fight On

The Indian cabinet's decision to call a pause in the Kashmir area was made despite a declaration by Pakistan's president that he would carry on the war with India until the "occupied areas are taken back."

In announcing the Indian government's decision, an official spokesman said:

"We have repeatedly declared that India has no territorial ambition.

"Now that Pakistani armed forces have surrendered in Bangla Desh, and Bangla Desh now is free, it is pointless in our view to continue the present conflict.

"Therefore in order to stop bloodshed and unnecessary loss of life, we have ordered our armed forces to cease fire everywhere on the western front, with effect from 2000 hours Indian standard time on Friday, Dec. 17, 1971."

India Seeks Reciprocation

"It is our earnest hope that there will be a corresponding immediate response from the government of Pakistan."

The time given is 8 p.m. local time, equivalent to 9:30 a.m. EST.

The eastern and western Pakistani fronts are separated by about 1,000 miles of Indian territory.

In the east, Indian soldiers marched victoriously into Dacca and Prime Minister Indira Gandhi said in New Delhi.

"Dacca is now the free capital of a free country."

It has been the provincial capital of the East wing of Pakistan refugees.

Mrs. Gandhi said refugees who had fled from East Pakistan to India were already returning to the area which India calls Bangla Desh, or Bengali nation.

The Pakistan president, Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan, apparently refusing to write off East Pakistan, broadcast his intention to put out, two weeks hence, a new constitution that he insisted would apply to "both the wings" of Pakistan.

Before New Delhi's announcement of its intention to cease fire in the west, an Indian spokesman had reported the biggest tank battle of the war as having taken place in that sector within the last 24 hours.

UN Appeal Brushed Aside

The cabinet's decision for the western ceasefire was immediately conveyed to Foreign Minister Swaran Singh, now at the United Nations.

Mrs. Gandhi had earlier brushed aside a UN General Assembly ceasefire appeal and had declared that India would "fight on until Bangla Desh is liberated." The announcement indicated she felt that her conditions for a ceasefire had been fulfilled.

Announcement of the eastern-front victory brought cheers in the New Delhi Parliament.

The victory came on the 12th day of fighting there. The prime minister said the surrender was signed in Dacca at 4:31 p.m. (6:01 a.m. EST) by Lt.-Gen. A. A. K. Niazi, commander of the estimated 80,000 Pakistani troops in the province.

The surrender was received by Lt.-Gen. J. S. Aurora, commander of India's eastern command, who flew to Dacca.

Refugees Already Head Back

Niazi surrendered nearly 24 hours after India, having given him an ultimatum to quit, suspended bombing of the East Pakistani capital. A half-hour before the ultimatum expired, the Pakistani commander asked for an extension and for an Indian staff officer to go to Dacca to discuss the surrender. The Indians sent Maj.-Gen. J. F. R. Jacob, with instructions to give Niazi until 5 p.m. to give up. Aurora went to Dacca a few hours later.

Indian troops had entered Dacca at 10:48 a.m., Mrs. Gandhi told Parliament, and Maj.-Gen. Mohammed Jamshed of the 36th Pakistani Division surrendered to them.

"The Indian armed forces will not remain in Bangla Desh longer than they are needed," Mrs. Gandhi said. India's only aim was "to assist the people of Bangla Desh and the Mukti Bahini to end the reign of terror there." The Mukti Bahini are East Pakistan's fighters for independence.

She said Indian armed forces and the Mukti Bahini were under strict order to prevent reprisals "against the Pakistan army soldiers and the Razakars," the locally recruited home guards, branded as collaborators by the Mukti Bahini.

"We hope Shiek Mujibur

PEKING RAPS INDIA

HONG KONG (UPI) — Communist China today warned the Soviet Union and India in a formal statement that "he who plays with fire will be consumed with fire," the New China News Agency reported.

A few minutes later NCNA said Peking had lodged a "strong" protest with New Delhi against the intrusion of Indian armed personnel into Chinese territory. Observers recalled that similar charges preceded the 1962 Sino-Indian border war.

China has supported Pakistan while the Soviet Union has backed India in the fighting on the Indian subcontinent.

The formal statement denounced India for aggression against Pakistan and the Soviet Union for its "energetic support" of the military operations launched by the New Delhi government.

"It is precisely under their joint conspiracy that the subversion, interference and aggression against Pakistan have been intensified," the statement said.

In the later broadcast, NCNA said the protest note was delivered by the Chinese foreign ministry to the Indian embassy in Peking today.

It said Chinese border guards reported that two bands of seven Indian armed personnel crossed separately on the China-Sikkim boundary and intruded into Chinese territory for reconnassiance. The alleged intrusion occurred on Dec. 10.

Meanwhile The Times of India reported today the Soviet Union may be sending elements of its navy into the Bay of Bengal which borders East Pakistan.

"The Soviet move is obviously a response to the provocative U.S. action in sending out a task force of its seventh fleet into the area," the paper said.

"Should the United States insist on establishing a beachhead in Bangla Desh to rescue trapped West Pakistan troops and civilians, the outcome may be serious international tension."

Police Get Review On Gastown Charges

No Vancouver policemen will be charged with assault during the Aug. 7 Gastown riot until the provincial attorney-general's department examines the matter.

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson said today he has called for a review of information and evidence gathered against five unnamed Vancouver policemen whom that city's prosecutor Stewart McMorran said would be charged with assault.

Peterson said he ordered the review as chief law enforcement officer in the province. It will be undertaken by his department.

He said he has notified the B.C. Federation of Peace Officers of his decision. The move follows a request by the Vancouver police union that the charges be dropped. Vancouver Mayor Tom Campbell also has said he is opposed to charging the policemen.

'SAME LAWS'

In announcing the review, Peterson said he has rejected an argument that charging the police would place them in triple jeopardy. The argument says the police face triple jeopardy from criminal and civil charges as well as disciplinary action within the force.

"Our police are subject to the same laws as anybody else," Peterson said.

But, he added, it would be dangerous for the police to feel that the next time a riot occurs they "wouldn't lift a finger" because of the threat of being charged.

TRANSFERS

The attorney-general pointed out that provincial Supreme Court Justice T. A. Dohm's inquiry into the riot did not say charges should be laid and suggested some officers might be transferred to other kinds of duty.

"It may be that the most serious action, the one that would be the most effective in this case," Peterson said, "would be discipline within the force itself."

He added he is always concerned about the morale of police forces. Even if criminal charges are laid, it would not be a "blanket condemnation of the police force," he said.

CONFIDENCE

"I have a great deal of confidence, admiration and respect for the Vancouver police force. In my book they compare in quality with any police force in the country or the world."

The city prosecutor's statement of intention to lay charges was given to the Vancouver Police Commission Dec. 3. The commission then decided to proceed with charges. Mayor Campbell said on Dec. 9 that He was the only member of the commission voting not to lay charges.

Campbell said doing so would hurt police morale. He said the matter should be left up to police chief John Fisk.

Peterson did not say when he would make a decision based on the review.

Surcharge Lifting Part of Package

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The treasury department today said the lifting of the 10-per-cent additional levy on dutiable imports will only take place as part of an international package agreement.

The treasury was commenting on a statement today by French Finance Minister Valery Giscard d'Estaing in Paris that the surcharge would come off the moment a realignment of currency parities is agreed upon.

The U.S. statement indicated the surcharge and other fiscal measures aimed at correcting a U.S. trade imbalance will only be abolished after the leading industrial nations agree on a general economic settlement, including a reform of trade relations and a redistribution of international defence costs, as well as currency realignment.

The deputy finance ministers from 10 leading non-Communist industrial nations meet here today to put together an agenda for their ministers in talks beginning Friday.

The Canadian delegation which arrived here Wednesday night included not only Deputy Finance Minister S. S. Reisman, but also, unexpectedly, Deputy Trade Minister James Grandy.

Finance Minister E. J. Benson and Louis Raminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, are expected later today.

Frigid Relief

EDMONTON (CP) — It was warming up today for Albertans who never had it so cold Wednesday.

The weather office said temperatures were heading for a relatively balmy zero, after plunging to record lows for Dec. 15 at eight locations.

The cold—it was 44 below at Edmonton international airport Wednesday night—slipped into Saskatchewan today, but the chief forecaster said the Arctic air mass had weakened and Saskatchewan would not get quite as frigid as Alberta.

At 7 a.m. it was 33 below at Prince Albert and Saskatoon, 22 below at Regina and 19 below at Moose Jaw.

Records for cold were shattered Wednesday at Fort Nelson, B.C., Edmonton international airport, Vermilion, Grande Prairie, Peace River, Fort Chipewyan and Whitecourt and equalled at Brooks and Red Deer.

Fort Nelson reported 47 below, the coldest day in December since the British Columbia community 475 miles northwest of Edmonton started keeping records in 1941. The previous December low was 46 below in 1951.

Few Flights Delayed

TORONTO (CP)—A work-to-rule campaign by Air Canada ground employees caused flight delays at Toronto International Airport today, but elsewhere across the country, no major disruption was reported.

An Air Canada spokesman said there were long line-ups at Toronto ticket counters and flight delays were averaging 15 minutes. Part of the problem was attributed to a passenger backlog from a heavy rain and wind storm Wednesday.

Thirty-five of 100 flights were cancelled Wednesday at Toronto and schedules were also disrupted at Montreal because of the storm. One 747 jumbo jet from Miami was diverted to Toronto from Montreal because of ice and freezing rain.

Authority Lacking For Review Board

By PETER McNELLY
Times Staff

Health Minister Ralph Loffmark's new medical review board does not have the power to regulate surgical priorities as the minister had predicted it would Monday.

And Loffmark does not yet appear to have solved the difficult problem of effecting a redistribution of doctors in B.C. but he has given himself power to hand-pick an advisory committee to help solve the problem.

This is the picture which emerged Wednesday following release of Monday's cabinet order outlining the responsibilities of the three medical boards Loffmark announced earlier this week.

REVIEW BOARD

The minister had indicated a medical review board would deal with priorities and procedures a hospital doing open heart surgery and other specialized practices on a province-wide basis.

He also said Monday the board would be responsible for such things as "how patients shall be handled in the wards and anything else that relates to the management of these wards."

He said the government would ask the board to "advise on what basis patients should be admitted."

No such powers are granted to the board in Wednesday's batch of cabinet orders. The order merely says the review board "shall make recommendations . . . concerning both individual cases and general policy respecting the granting, refusing, or cancelling of a permit to practise medicine in a hospital, or respecting voting rights. . . ."

A highly-placed official in the B.C. Hospital Insurance Service Wednesday refused to explain why the order did not go further in the area Loffmark outlined Monday.

He said the wording of the order appeared to be the way he had seen it in draft form but referred further questions

STANFIELD PLEDGES BRAS FOR BRA-LESS

Times News Service

OTTAWA — In an outstanding act of Christmas charity, the New Democrats allowed Conservative leader Robert Stanfield to steal the show Wednesday night at the NDP Christmas party.

The NDP used Stanfield — in person — as the climax to a funny and risque skit on King Arthur and the round table.

Arthur was former NDP leader Tommy Douglas, whose wife Guinevere proved to be unfaithful.

When Arthur took Guinevere to task for being an adultress, she rejected him as a male chauvinist.

In marched Sir Stanfield, who said: "I want to make one thing perfectly clear. The Conservative Party has always stood for help for the helpless, hope for the hopeless and bras for the bra-less.

"Good Guinevere, I'm going to take you away from all this. No more sanctimony and no self-righteousness."

At which time Sir Stanfield, saying Guinevere should sweep British Columbia and Quebec, swept Guinevere away — bra-less.

Ulster Defeatism Irks Protestants

BELFAST (AP) — Anger and frustration were reported swelling among Northern Ireland's Protestant majority today over a British admission there is little hope of a complete military solution to the violence which has tormented Ulster for more than two years.

And as if to underscore the gloomy forecast, guerrilla gunmen early today severely wounded another British soldier on patrol in Belfast, adding to the two already in danger of losing their lives from gunfire Wednesday.

British Home Secretary Reginald Maudling, who holds cabinet responsibility for Northern Ireland, shocked Protestants Wednesday when he told reporters it was likely the terrorists "would not be defeated, not completely eliminated, but have their violence reduced to an acceptable level."

The battle being fought by 14,000 British troops against the Irish Republican Army is a hard one, he said, and there appears to be no limit "to the evil these men can do."

Maudling's statement, made after two days of intensive talks in Northern Ireland with army and government chiefs, drew a swift retort from Rev. Ian Paisley, a hardliner who speaks for a powerful body of Protestants.

He said no level of violence would be acceptable to the people of Northern Ireland.

They would be "even more frustrated by this public declaration that it is not the intention of the British government to absolutely win the battle against the IRA," he said.

Paisley demanded an emergency debate in the Northern Ireland Parliament over the issue, while fears rose that Maudling's admission could spark a violent Protestant reaction once its implications of never-ending strife struck home.

The IRA's bomb-and-bullet terror campaign, which has brought 197 violent deaths in 28 months, is aimed at bringing Northern Ireland under the rule of the Irish Republic. The North's one million Protestants —who outnumber Roman Catholics two to one— are implacably opposed to union with the overwhelmingly Catholic republic.

Census Does Double Take on Marijuana

OTTAWA (CP) — When the first farmer's census form listing marijuana as a cash crop came in, census officials smiled.

After several more, they began looking at one another with raised eyebrows.

Finally, the census bureau sent inspectors out to the fields and found the farmers were telling the truth—marijuana has become a major cash crop for some farmers, representing all age groups, in several provinces.

Because of census rules, officials cannot release any statistics or name the provinces.

More importantly—as far as the farmers are concerned—the officials can't pass on the names of marijuana-growers to the RCMP.

A Statistics Canada spokesman said today that statistics on the acreage devoted to marijuana and the crop's cash value will not be reported separately, but will be lumped in with "other crops" in figures to be released sometime after March.

If province-by-province figures for marijuana were given, the spokesman said, "by a process of deduction individuals could be identified."

By law, census officials cannot release information that could be tied to any one individual or company.

But they confirm that marijuana was the major source of income for some Canadian farmers last year. An ounce of the illegal substance can sell for as much as $20 on the retail level.

The acreage devoted to marijuana on a national basis is minuscule, but officials indicated it is larger than such pharmaceutical crops as digitalis, which comes from the foxglove plant.

When RCMP raids on seizures of several marijuana harvests were reported recently, Statistics Canada officials checked and—to their relief—found that "it wasn't any of ours."

Census officials couldn't help but be pleased at one aspect of the situation.

"Some of our employees were amazed at the degree of trust" given census-takers and the census bureau, one official said.

A spokesman for the taxation department heard the news with interest.

"We're not aware that any farmers have reported that they are deriving income from marijuana," the taxman said.

If the farmers involved did report their income from marijuana, they would be protected by law from having their return statements passed on to the police.

$35 Million in Jets Bought by Venezuela

OTTAWA (CP) — Canada has sold 20 CF-5 jet aircraft to Venuzuela, a joint announcement by the trade and defence departments stated Wednesday.

The value of the sale, under negotiation for several months, was not disclosed, but informants said it is about $35 million.

It was understood the sale will be financed by the federal government's Export Development Corp., but details of the credit arrangement were not available.

Eighteen of the ground support planes will come from armed forces stocks. They will include 16 CF-5A single-seaters, and two CF-5D dual models to facilitate training of Venezuelan pilots.

They will be replaced in the Canadian inventory by 18 new trainer models to be produced by Canadair in Montreal. The company will also produce two new CF-5Ds for Venezuela.

Canada will supply the South American country with spare parts, equipment and personnel training assistance in addition to the aircraft themselves.

"The project will result in substantially increased employment for Canadair and other Canadian aviation suppliers," the announcement said.

The defence department early this year took delivery of the last planes in a 115-plane order of CF-5s, manufactured at Canadair under licence from Northrop Corp. of California.

The contract was worth $215 million.

The CF-5 was designed primarily as a close-support bomber, with interceptor capabilities. Two squadrons have been formed in Canada, at Bagotville, Que., and Cold Lake, Alta.

However, many of the planes were placed in storage — primarily at Trenton, Ont, Ont. — until the defence department decided on a role for them.

In the defence white paper published this summer, the new role was outlined — that of advanced trainer. The CF-5s will replace aging T-33 Silver Star jets in this function.

The decision meant that more of the dual models would be required. Plans were made to convert single-seat CF-5s to dual status, at a cost of about $10 million, but now this won't be necessary.

Production of the additional aircraft is expected to begin soon, and continue for three years.

Gaps in Parole System Leave Inmates 'Insecure'

OTTAWA (CP) — A Senate investigation of the parole system opened Wednesday with Solicitor-General Jean Pierre Goyer saying an "obvious gap" exists between the National Parole Board and the Canadian Penitentiary Service.

Goyer, saying that the parole system must be changed, told a Senate committee that insecurity among prisoners and administrative jealousies are one result of the gap.

George Street, board chairman since its inception in 1959, jotted notes at the back of the committee room. He will testify today.

Goyer said that when the parole board was established, the penitentiary service was "a highly centralized and rigid service whose aim was chiefly the punishment of the individuals."

Pre-release programs were non-existent, inside programs were few, there was little communication between prisoners and employers, and little with the public.

In the 1960s the system had become decentralized with construction of a number of new medium- and minimum-security prisons. The "living-unit concept" was being applied inside prisons to "resocialize" prisoners.

Temporary leave programs eased them back into society. And agreements were reached with 40 voluntary agencies across Canada to help with rehabilitation of released prisoners.

It was imperative that the Senate committee — which is under Senator Harper Prowse (L-Alberta), a parole system critic — take these facts into account.

"The field of parole must be reviewed thoroughly," Goyer said. "At this stage, we cannot be satisfied with mere amendments to the law or changes in regulations, as in the past."

As things stood, a prisoner might be released either through a parole board or a penitentiary service decision. A unified system would "help avoid the feeling of insecurity" this created.

Goyer suggested that parole be brought under the penitentiaries service — with local parole boards being established and staffed by specialists, volunteers and others.

The parole board itself might remain as an appeal body and a supervisory one, drawing up guides for local boards and seeing that uniformity and efficiency prevailed.

NUDES TIRE TIRE FIRM

LONDON (UPI) — The British branches of the Italian Pirelli tire company has scrapped its traditional nude pin-up calendars for 1972. Next year's calendars feature fully clothes girls in a 1920s setting.

"We believe the modern male is bored with over-exposure to nudity and secretly longs for the return of the fragile, ornate women of the past," a company spokesman said.

Hams to Drive If You Get 'Sort of Innocently Drunk'

Victoria Times
THURSDAY, DEC. 16, 1971. 25
SECOND SECTION

Mobile radio hams and Saanich police are offering a novel "drive home service" Christmas Eve for the person who finds a few drinks at the office party have snuck up on him.

The Victoria Citizen's Band Radio Car Club will man three of their radio-equipped cars that night and each will have two drivers aboard.

The cars will respond to calls from what Saanich police Sgt. Bill Chisholm called "sort of innocent drunks," people who didn't plan much drinking but suddenly find they've had too much to drive safely after attending such impromptu gatherings as office parties.

People trapped downtown in this condition who can't get a taxi or a ride home but need their car at home can put in a call for help to Saanich police.

The police will pass the word to one of the cruising radio car club autos. One of the drivers will drive the caller home in his own car while the other club member will follow to pick up the driver.

There will be no charge for the service. It's a contribution by the car club to safer traffic conditions and Chisholm says it could also save a family a good deal of grief at Christmas time.

Rather than ruin Christmas for himself and family, particularly the children, by getting into an accident or stopped by police when he is impaired, the driver who has done a bit of celebrating now has a safe alternative, Chisholm said.

And he needn't worry about calling police for help in this situation, he added. There will be no trouble with the law so long as he doesn't drive his car.

Chisholm said he had checked out the plan with a couple of taxi companies. They told him they are always extremely busy Christmas Eve and the program could actually help them.

The project is one of a number of public service efforts the club plans, said president Al MacKenzie.

It's for the person who's had too much to drive safely but must have his car at home Christmas Eve or Christmas Day.

Accident statistics from the Motor Vehicles Branch show there were far more mishaps in December than October or November of last year.

No similar operation is planned for New Year's Eve. Chisholm said excess drinking that night could be labelled "planned drunks."

Pay Boosts Blamed As Tax Hike Looms

A tax increase in Victoria is likely next year, according to preliminary budget estimates presented to council members this morning.

Officials warned against making definite tax increase predictions, but wage contracts signed last year, especially with police and fire forces, have already committed the city to hefty spending increases.

NO BIG PROBLEMS

Today was the first time aldermen have tackled budget problems this early in the year. Normally the budget is presented well into the year it affects, usually in April.

Comptroller Jim Bramley told aldermen gathered as committee of the whole that "we are ending 1971 with no major budgetary problems."

As the figures stand now, in rough form, the city is faced with an increase in expenditures of about $2.5 million, representing a rise of about six mills.

Aldermen made no attempt to cut the estimates, but discussed several ways of improving revenue.

These included a one-quarter per cent increase in the business tax and a fee for rezoning applications for developers.

In the forecast, the city's budget would rise to about $27.3 million from a projected 1971 figure of $24.8 million.

Fire chief Eric Simmons is asking for 21 new fire fighters, which would start work Oct. 1 next year.

The initial cost would be about $55,000, but in future years it would add another amount of more than $200,000. The projected 1972 fire fighting budget comes to $1,335,800, up from this year's $1,199,350.

$1.7 MILLION

The police department's budget could rise from this year's $1,553,765 to an estimated $1,743,000, depending on future wage settlements.

Both fire and police forces received wage hikes last year but new contracts starting March 31 have yet to be written.

Bramley estimated that the city can expect an increase in the assessed value of city taxpaying property of more than $5.5 million over last year, to a new total of $163,500,000. This alone would bring in an added $240,000 in revenue without raising the mill rate.

35,000 Saw Fish

A total of 35,000 persons watched salmon spawn in Goldstream River this fall, according to a count completed today.

Park naturalist Freeman King said the figure includes 3,600 school children from Victoria, Saanich, Sooke, Duncan, Cowichan Valley and Lake.

"Some of the visitors were from Saskatchewan, Ontario and Quebec," he said.

A count of salmon spawn escapement in the river shows an increase in the number of coho and a decrease in chum.

Fisheries official Harry Grainger said 1,500 coho spawned in the river as compared with about 1,200 last year. The chum were down from 5,000 to 3,500.

"We are pleased with this year's coho escapement," he said. "This is an improvement."

He estimated about 90 spring salmon escaped up river.

Vandals Hit Builder $5,000 Reward Set

By ROGER STONEBANKS
Times Staff

A non-union contractor is offering a $5,000 reward for anyone seeing or knowing about property damage at an Esquimalt building site.

Hans Hartwig, owner of Wigmar Construction Ltd., said someone poured water into the gasoline tank of a backhoe between Monday evening and Tuesday morning.

Esquimalt police confirmed they received a complaint from Hartwig and investigated.

"We don't know if it was kids or malicious," said police chief Earl Sarsiat. "It looks more like kids."

He added that if it was not children, those concerned would have "covered their tracks."

Wigmar has been the focal point of an organizing drive by construction unions against non-union contractors.

Deliveries of ready-mix concrete were interrupted at one point but these resumed after a B.C. Supreme Court injunction was obtained.

John Schibli, secretary of the Vancouver Island Building and Construction Trades Council, said Wednesday "the fight with Wigmar is still going on" because the injunction related only to interruptions of ready-mix concrete.

"Other avenues are wide open and we intend to proceed with it," he told Victoria Labor Council delegates.

Schibli said the policy of the building unions is that construction sites shall be 100 per cent union, or 100 per cent non-union.

Meanwhile, the newly-former non-union contractors' association issued its first press release and named its officers.

Hartwig is president of the Right to Work Association of Vancouver Island. Sam Snoblen is vice-president and lawyer George Jones is secretary-treasurer.

"The association will support every effort to maintain the right of every member of the construction industry to work," the press release stated.

"They will support any member who faces coercion or intimidation or attempts to force him to join any organization that he does not wish to join.

"The association will protect individuals from being forceably removed from construction projects against their will and will also assist all members of the construction industry to improve their knowledge of the construction industry and the complex labor problems existing today."

BALMY VICTORIA ESCAPES SNOW

While most B.C. centres, including Vancouver, dig themselves out of the snow, Victoria emerges again green-clean.

The weatherman said today the Arctic front is retreating from southern B.C. and milder weather moving in, which doesn't make much difference for balmy Victoria.

Some melting snow fell on Victoria overnight and a light snowfall dusted the higher elevations in the area this morning.

High for today is predicted as 44, and the low tonight should be 35, with partial clearing expected today.

And to make you feel even better, it was a frosty 44 below overnight in Edmonton.

Drug 'Philosopher' Jailed

A 29-year-old man, who pleaded guilty today to possession of marijuana, told Judge William Ostler that he used the drug to "grow" his consciousness.

Herbert K. Gerhardt, of no fixed address, was sentenced to two months in jail. It was the accused's second conviction for marijuana possession within a year.

"I did not harm anybody physically or spiritally," Gerhardt said.

The accused, originally from Germany, said he should be allowed to use "sacraments" to help him meet God.

Ostler said if Gerhardt chose to live in Canada he should accept the laws of the country.

Gerhardt referred to Nazi Germany and said "they obeyed the laws and were still criminals."

He said he believed man's first allegiance was to his consciousness.

Ostler disputed the accused's argument saying he wasn't viewing the situation over-all. The judge said if the accused possessed marijuana it meant someone was supplying it to him, a business he described as "nefarious."

★ ★ ★

Gerhardt was apprehended outside a house in the 800-block North Park about 7:15 p.m. Wednesday.

He had about an ounce of marijuana with him which he admitted was his.

Court was told that he was convicted of an identical offence in Montreal last December.

Heroin Addict Jailed at 14

A 14-year-old boy who has been addicted to heroin and was transferred to adult court for lack of custodial facilities at the juvenile level was sentenced to at least four months in prison Wednesday by Judge William Ostler.

Defence counsel Mike Hutchison said the boy had been addicted to heroin about two to three months but "appears to have shaken it."

The youth pleaded guilty Wednesday to six counts of breaking, entering and theft. Money, liquor, cigarettes, a lighter, a Canadian passport and a watch were among items taken from homes on Lampson, Joffre, Dunsmuir and Wollaston in Esquimalt.

The offences occurred in June, September and October.

★ ★ ★

Hutchison said the case was a "most difficult and trying" one and the offences were committed while the accused was "attempting to go it alone."

He added that the boy was substantially involved in heroin at the time.

Prosecutor John Macintyre said the youth had been sent to Riverview for psychiatric examination and had been returned fit to stand trial.

He said the boy had been transferred to adult court because facilities at juvenile court were not adequate.

Ostler sentenced the boy to four months definite and eight months indeterminate in prison. He recommended that the sentence be served at a forestry camp.

The judge noted that recent changes in the law made it possible to give the accused a definite-indeterminate sentence.

He said a year ago a conviction would have meant the youth would have been sent "to a common jail."

Officials Suspect Arson in $115,000 Fire

Fire officials suspect arson in a fire which caused an estimated $115,000 damage Tuesday night to the Hillside Pharmacy, adjacent businesses and apartments above.

Victoria deputy fire chief Carl Coates said today the suspicion exists because there is "no logical source of ignition" such as electric wiring in the immediate area where the blaze started.

He said investigating officials from the fire marshal's office in Vancouver will examine the ruined corner block at Quadra and Hillside today.

The fire started at the bottom of some stairs behind The Booke Shoppe at 1007 Hillside, Coates said, and worked its way through a covered passage into the back of the drugstore.

Coates said among the items stored in some cupboards near the spot where the fire started was an oil drum, but this had not been a contributing factor as the fire worked into the cupboards from outside.

Meanwhile, a spokesman for the Walkey family, which has operated a drugstore at Hillside since 1945, said Wednesday he wasn't sure whether the store would ever reopen.

It was also uncertain whether the building could be rebuilt.

Two doors away from the heavily-damaged corner block, the Fox Theatre received severe water and smoke damage. But owner-manager Barney Simmons said today he is hoping the cinema will be able to reopen Friday night.

"It needs a complete paint job to get rid of the smoke markings and smell," he said, "and the wall-to-wall carpeting has been ruined."

The residents of the seven apartments, who spent much of Wednesday searching the rubble for useable items, have had to move to temporary accommodation. Most are living with relatives or friends.

Private Mail Haulers Dig In To Battle Government Takeover

Private mail haulers in western Canada including Alert Service Transfer Co. Ltd. of Victoria, have formed an alliance to oppose the post office's method of taking over mail transportation March 1.

The group has requested a meeting with Postmaster-General Jean Pierre Cote and its lawyer, Ian Jessiman of Winnipeg, said that unless the post office shows "good faith" and is prepared to reverse its position on compensation, the companies are prepared to discontinue service almost immediately.

Alert Service president M. R. Williams said the post office is willing to buy trucks and equipment used in mail transport, but not make a settlement for lost business.

He said the post office contract is 70 per cent of his company's business. The company would lose at least $25,000 a month income.

Twenty-five drivers will lose their jobs with Alert Service, but he said they will be hired by the post office.

"They have made commitments for the men, but not the contractors," he said.

Jessiman said the post office is trying to make separate deals with each company and that the post office is not living up to promises to effect no hardships on companies involved.

The service provided by the firms is pickup and transfer of mail from mail boxes to the post office and delivery of mail out to terminal boxes.

3 Directors Miss Meeting

The three Victoria directors in the Capital Regional District missed Wednesday's board meeting.

But Mayor-Elect Ald. Peter Pollen attended as an observer.

No one could recall a previous time when all three city representatives failed to attend a regional board meeting.

Absent were Victoria Mayor Courtney Haddock, defeated by Pollen in last Saturday's election, Ald. Clyde Savage and Ald. Percy Frampton.

Board chairman Hugh Curtis said both Haddock and Savage indicated in advance they could not attend. No word was received from Frampton, but it was learned later he is in England until Jan. 10.

Cats and Carols and Christmas Cards

WHEN A FAMILY CAT clanks home with a steel trap gripping one leg, feline fanciers of Victoria don't hesitate to show their indignation. But SPCA enquiries have failed to reveal the existence of a cat trap-line operated in the Fort-Pemberton area.

Meanwhile, Cat Fleecy — may she be more careful where she steps in future — is recuperating from her ordeal in the Fort Street apartment she shares with human friends.

SPCA officers point out that a brush-grown vacant lot not far distant provides a haven for rabbits that have escaped their hutches. They suspect the trap which nabbed Fleecy may have been set by someone who was hoping for a long-eared catch. Since the trap wasn't anchored by its chain, their hypothesis is that a boy or boys may be at the root of this minor mystery.

But they're free to admit that they lack clues which would shed light. Unless Fleecy tells all at Christmas Eve midnight when animals talk, a mystery it is likely to remain.

Less baffling is the case of a whistling swan, now recuperating with the help of penicillin shots on a Metchosin pond.

It's believed that the whistler, one of species that occasionally breaks its migration from northern breeding grounds to winter in these parts, was caught by recent high winds and hurtled tail-over-teacup into a tree.

★

You may find the combination unlikely, but a transplanted London barrow-boy, a choir of small singers and a remedial teacher of arithmetic plan to lay on some pre-Christmas gladness and joy.

The recipients, if this happy notion comes off, will be elderly patients of still-picketed Sandringham Private Hospital.

In the years before nurses' aides and hospital management failed to agree on salary, December concerts were enjoyed by the hospital's 80 patients. But last year Christmas passed without a visit by entertainers from the world outside the hospital grounds.

Mrs. Monica Bell, who works with mathematically-inept boys and girls, learned that the elderly patients would dearly like to share a carol singalong.

She brought the word to Victoria West elementary school, where Mrs. Val Morgan directs a junior choir of sweet voices recruited from Grades 1 and 2.

With choir lined up, Mrs. Bell got in touch with Pat "Tosh" Kelleher, whose now-idled barrow once set the merry ghost of London's old Covent Garden dancing in Bastion Square. Tosh's gifts include a good singing voice. Although his luck has not been of the best lately, Tosh needed no second asking. If they wanted him to add his Cockney accents to the caroling, why, Gor Blimey, he'd turn up and welcome!

So, all going well, and on a day still to be set, the patients in Sandringham will get their Christmas carols.

A nice idea. But in a spirit of non-partisan peace and goodwill, why not also belt out a couple of numbers for the pickets?

★

We have arrived at the days when the Christmas cards come pattering in. For that happy circumstance, credit the female of the species. If card-sending were left to the male, the makers of these bright and welcome tokens would probably go broke.

Thanks to wifely zeal, however, the cards get mailed in an exchange that now burdens postmen and their seasonal helpers.

It could be that those cards offer more than a hint as to the mood of the nation.

My impression is that this year's are smaller and homier than those of the 1970 sending. So far, we've had no mobiles and mighty few of the ornate confections that marked the years of peak prosperity.

Most received to date run to the traditional and the pictorial. Among our exceptions are a red eye-catcher from Japan in the shape of a Japanese house, and a card from Hawaii that breaks with the accepted colors of Christmas.

Black, that one, with a touch of gold, and sinister-handsome.

Hams to Drive If You Get 'Sort of Innocently Drunk'

Victoria Times
THURSDAY, DEC. 16, 1971. 25
SECOND SECTION

Mobile radio hams and Saanich police are offering a novel "drive home service" Christmas Eve for the person who finds a few drinks at the office party have snuck up on him.

The Victoria Citizen's Band Radio Car Club will man three of their radio-equipped cars that night and each will have two drivers aboard.

The cars will respond to calls from what Saanich police Sgt. Bill Chisholm called "sort of innocent drunks," people who didn't plan much drinking but suddenly find they've had too much to drive safely after attending such impromptu gatherings as office parties.

People trapped downtown in this condition who can't get a taxi or a ride home but need their car at home can put in a call for help to Saanich police.

The police will pass the word to one of the cruising radio car club autos. One of the drivers will drive the caller home in his own car while the other club member will follow to pick up the driver.

There will be no charge for the service. It's a contribution by the car club to safer traffic conditions and Chisholm says it could also save a family a good deal of grief at Christmas time.

Rather than ruin Christmas for himself and family, particularly the children, by getting into an accident or stopped by police when he is impaired, the driver who has done a bit of celebrating now has a safe alternative, Chisholm said.

And he needn't worry about calling police for help in this situation, he added. There will be no trouble with the law so long as he doesn't drive his car.

Chisholm said he had checked out the plan with a couple of taxi companies. They told him they are always extremely busy Christmas Eve and the program could actually help them.

The project is one of a number of public service efforts the club plans, said president Al MacKenzie.

It's for the person who's had too much to drive safely but must have his car at home Christmas Eve or Christmas Day.

Accident statistics from the Motor Vehicles Branch show there were far more mishaps in December than October or November of last year.

No similar operation is planned for New Year's Eve. Chisholm said excess drinking that night could be labelled "planned drunks."

Pay Boosts Blamed As Tax Hike Looms

A tax increase in Victoria is likely next year, according to preliminary budget estimates presented to council members this morning.

Officials warned against making definite tax increase predictions, but wage contracts signed last year, especially with police and fire forces, have already committed the city to hefty spending increases.

NO BIG PROBLEMS

Today was the first time aldermen have tackled budget problems this early in the year. Normally the budget is presented well into the year it affects, usually in April.

Comptroller Jim Bramley told aldermen gathered as committee of the whole that "we are ending 1971 with no major budgetary problems."

As the figures stand now, in rough form, the city is faced with an increase in expenditures of about $2.5 million, representing a rise of about six mills.

Aldermen made no attempt to cut the estimates, but discussed several ways of improving revenue.

These included a one-quarter per cent increase in the business tax and a fee for rezoning applications for developers.

In the forecast, the city's budget would rise to about $27.3 million from a projected 1971 figure of $24.8 million.

Fire chief Eric Simmons is asking for 21 new fire fighters, who would start work Oct. 1 next year.

The initial cost would be about $55,000, but in future years it would add another amount of more than $200,000. The projected 1972 fire fighting budget comes to $1,335,800, up from this year's $1,199,350.

$1.7 MILLION

The police department's budget could rise from this year's $1,553,765 to an estimated $1,743,000, depending on future wage settlements.

Both fire and police forces received wage hikes last year but new contracts starting March 31 have yet to be written.

Bramley estimated that the city can expect an increase in the assessed value of city taxpaying property of more than $5.5 million over last year, to a new total of $163,500,000. This alone would bring in an added $240,000 in revenue without raising the mill rate.

35,000 Saw Fish

A total of 35,000 persons watched salmon spawn in Goldstream River this fall, according to a count completed today.

Park naturalist Freeman King said the figure includes 3,600 school children from Victoria, Saanich, Sooke, Duncan, Cowichan Valley and Lake.

"Some of the visitors were from Saskatchewan, Ontario and Quebec," he said.

A count of salmon spawn escapement in the river shows an increase in the number of coho and a decrease in chum.

Fisheries official Harry Grainger said 1,500 coho spawned in the river as compared with about 1,200 last year. The chum were down from 5,000 to 3,500.

"We are pleased with this year's coho escapement," he said. "This is an improvement."

He estimated about 90 spring salmon escaped up river.

Vandals Hit Builder $5,000 Reward Set

A non-union contractor is offering a $5,000 reward for anyone seeing or knowing about property damage at an Esquimalt building site.

Hans Hartwig, owner of Wigmar Construction Ltd., said someone poured water into the gasoline tank of a backhoe between Monday evening and Tuesday morning.

Esquimalt police confirmed they received a complaint from Hartwig and investigated.

"We don't know if it was kids or malicious," said police chief Earl Sarsiat. "It looks more like kids."

He added that if it was not children, those concerned would have "covered their tracks."

Wigmar has been the focal point of an organizing drive by construction unions against non-union contractors.

India Takes Dacca, Extends Ceasefire

From AP-Reuter

The Indian army triumphed on its eastern front today with the unconditional surrender of Pakistan's army in East Pakistan. Then the Indian government ordered its troops on the western front to stop fighting as of Friday night in a unilateral ceasefire.

Pakistan Vows to Fight On

The Indian cabinet's decision to call a pause in the Kashmir area was made despite a declaration by Pakistan's president that he would carry on the war with India until the "occupied areas are taken back."

In announcing the Indian government's decision, an official spokesman said:

"We have repeatedly declared that India has no territorial ambition.

"Now that Pakistani armed forces have surrendered in Bangla Desh, and Bangla Desh now is free, it is pointless in our view to continue the present conflict.

"Therefore in order to stop bloodshed and unnecessary loss of life, we have ordered our armed forces to cease fire everywhere on the western front, with effect from 2000 hours Indian standard time on Friday, Dec. 17, 1971."

India Seeks Reciprocation

"It is our earnest hope that there will be a corresponding immediate response from the government of Pakistan."

The time given is 8 p.m. local time, equivalent to 9:30 a.m. EST.

The eastern and western Pakistani fronts are separated by about 1,000 miles of Indian territory.

In the east, Indian soldiers marched victoriously into Dacca and Prime Minister Indira Gandhi said in New Delhi.

"Dacca is now the free capital of a free country."

It has been the provincial capital of the East wing of Pakistan

Mrs. Gandhi said refugees who had fled from East Pakistan to India were already returning to the area which India calls Bangla Desh, or Bengali nation.

The Pakistan president, Agha Mohammed Yahya Khan, apparently refusing to write off East Pakistan, broadcast his intention to put out, two weeks hence, a new constitution that he insisted would apply to "both the wings" of Pakistan.

Before New Delhi's announcement of its intention to cease fire in the west, an Indian spokesman had reported the biggest tank battle of the war as having taken place in that sector within the last 24 hours.

UN Appeal Brushed Aside

The cabinet's decision for the western ceasefire was immediately conveyed to Foreign Minister Swaran Singh, now at the United Nations.

Mrs. Gandhi had earlier brushed aside a UN General Assembly ceasefire appeal and had declared that India would "fight on until Bangla Desh is liberated." The announcement indicated she felt that her conditions for a ceasefire had been fulfilled.

Announcement of the eastern-front victory brought cheers in the New Delhi Parliament.

The victory came on the 12th day of fighting there. The prime minister said the surrender was signed in Dacca at 4:31 p.m. (6:01 a.m. EST) by Lt.-Gen. A. A. K. Niazi, commander of the estimated 80,000 Pakistani troops in the province.

The surrender was received by Lt.-Gen. J. S. Aurora, commander of India's eastern command, who flew to Dacca.

Surrender Terms Discussed

Niazi surrendered nearly 24 hours after India, having given him an ultimatum to quit, suspended bombing of the East Pakistani capital. A half-hour before the ultimatum expired, the Pakistani commander asked for an extension and for an Indian staff officer to go to Dacca to discuss the surrender. The Indians sent Maj.-Gen. J. F. R. Jacob, with instructions to give Niazi until 5 p.m. to give up. Aurora went to Dacca a few hours later.

Indian troops had entered Dacca at 10:48 a.m.. Mrs. Gandhi told Parliament, and Maj.-Gen. Mohammed Jamshed of the 36th Pakistani Division surrendered to them.

"The Indian armed forces will not remain in Bangla Desh longer than they are needed," Mrs. Gandhi said. India's only aim was "to assist the people of Bangla Desh and the Mukti Bahini to end the reign of terror there." The Mukti Bahini are East Pakistan's fighters for independence.

She said Indian armed forces and the Mukti Bahini were under strict order to prevent reprisals "against the Pakistan army soldiers and the Razakars," the locally recruited home guards, branded as collaborators by the Mukti Bahini.

"We hope Shiek Mujibur

PEKING RAPS INDIA

HONG KONG (UPI) — Communist China today warned the Soviet Union and India in a formal statement that "he who plays with fire will be consumed with fire," the New China News Agency reported.

A few minutes later NCNA said Peking had lodged a "strong" protest with New Delhi against the intrusion of Indian armed personnel into Chinese territory. Observers recalled that similar charges preceded the 1962 Sino-Indian border war.

China has supported Pakistan while the Soviet Union has backed India in the fighting on the Indian subcontinent.

The formal statement denounced India for aggression against Pakistan and the Soviet Union for its "energetic support" of the military operations launched by the New Delhi government.

"It is precisely under their joint conspiracy that the subversion, interference and aggression against Pakistan have been intensified," the statement said.

In the later broadcast, NCNA said the protest note was delivered by the Chinese foreign ministry to the Indian embassy in Peking today.

It said Chinese border guards reported that two bands of seven Indian armed personnel crossed separately on the China-Sikkim boundary and intruded into Chinese territory for reconnassiance. The alleged intrusion occurred on Dec. 10.

Meanwhile The Times of India reported today the Soviet Union may be sending elements of its navy into the Bay of Bengal which borders East Pakistan.

"The Soviet move is obviously a response to the provocative U.S. action in sending out a task force of its seventh fleet into the area," the paper said.

"Should the United States insist on establishing a beachhead in Bangla Desh to rescue trapped West Pakistan troops and civilians, the outcome may be serious international tension."

Authority Lacking For Review Board

By PETER McNELLY
Times Staff

Health Minister Ralph Loffmark's new medical review board does not have the power to regulate surgical priorities as the minister had predicted it would Monday.

And Loffmark does not yet appear to have solved the difficult problem of effecting a redistribution of doctors in B.C. but he has given himself power to hand-pick an advisory committee to help solve the problem.

This is the picture which emerged Wednesday following release of Monday's cabinet order outlining the responsibilities of the three medical boards Loffmark announced earlier this week.

REVIEW BOARD

The minister had indicated a medical review board would deal with priorities and procedures a hospital doing open heart surgery and other specialized practices on a province-wide basis.

He also said Monday the board would be responsible for such things as "how patients shall be handled in the wards and anything else that relates to the management of these wards."

He said the government would ask the board to "advise on what basis patients should be admitted."

No such powers are granted to the board in Wednesday's batch of cabinet orders. The order merely says the review board "shall make recommendations . . . concerning both individual cases and general policy respecting the granting, refusing, or cancelling of a permit to practise medicine in a hospital, or respecting voting rights. . . ."

A highly-placed official in the B.C. Hospital Insurance Service Wednesday refused to explain why the order did not go further in the area Loffmark outlined Monday.

SAME AS DRAFT

He said the wording of the order appeared to be the way he had seen it in draft form but referred further questions

STANFIELD PLEDGES BRAS FOR BRA-LESS

Times News Service

OTTAWA — In an outstanding act of Christmas charity, the New Democrats allowed Conservative leader Robert Stanfield to steal the show Wednesday night at the NDP Christmas party.

The NDP used Stanfield — in person — as the climax to a funny and risque skit on King Arthur and the round table.

Arthur was former NDP leader Tommy Douglas, whose wife Guinevere proved to be unfaithful.

When Arthur took Guinevere to task for being an adultress, she rejected him as a male chauvinist.

In marched Sir Stanfield, who said: "I want to make one thing perfectly clear. The Conservative Party has always stood for help for the helpless, hope for the hopeless and bras for the bra-less.

"Good Guinevere, I'm going to take you away from all this. No more sanctimony and no self-righteousness."

At which time Sir Stanfield, saying Guinevere should sweep British Columbia and Quebec, swept Guinevere away — bra-less.

Police Get Review On Gastown Charges

No Vancouver policemen will be charged with assault during the Aug. 7 Gastown riot until the provincial attorney-general's department examines the matter.

Attorney-General Leslie Peterson said today he has called for a review of information and evidence gathered against five unnamed Vancouver policemen whom that city's prosecutor Stewart McMorran said would be charged with assault.

Peterson said he ordered the review as chief law enforcement officer in the province. It will be undertaken by his department.

He said he has notified the B.C. Federation of Peace Officers of his decision. The move follows a request by the Vancouver police union that the charges be dropped. Vancouver Mayor Tom Campbell also has said he is opposed to charging the policemen.

'SAME LAWS'

In announcing the review, Peterson said he has rejected an argument that charging the police would place them in triple jeopardy. The argument says the police face triple jeopardy from criminal and civil charges as well as disciplinary action within the force.

"Our police are subject to the same laws as anybody else," Peterson said.

But, he added, it would be dangerous for the police to feel that the next time a riot occurs they "wouldn't lift a finger" because of the threat of being charged.

TRANSFERS

The attorney-general pointed out that provincial Supreme Court Justice T. A. Dohm's inquiry into the riot did not say charges should be laid and suggested some officers might be transferred to other kinds of duty.

"It may be that the most serious action, the one that would be the most effective in this case," Peterson said, "would be discipline within the force itself."

The city prosecutor's statement of intention to lay charges was given to the Vancouver Police Commission Dec. 3. The commission then decided to proceed with charges. Mayor Campbell said on Dec. 9 that he was the only member of the commission voting not to lay charges.

Campbell said doing so would hurt police morale. He said the matter should be left up to police chief John Fisk.

Peterson did not say when he would make a decision based on the review.

Surcharge Lifting Part of Package

WASHINGTON (Reuter) — The treasury department today said the lifting of the 10-per-cent additional levy on dutiable imports will only take place as part of an international package agreement.

The treasury was commenting on a statement today by French Finance Minister Valery Giscard d'Estaing in Paris that the surcharge would come off the moment a realignment of currency parities is agreed upon.

The U.S. statement indicated the surcharge and other fiscal measures aimed at correcting a U.S. trade imbalance will only be abolished after the leading industrial nations agree on a general economic settlement, including a reform of trade relations and a redistribution of international defence costs, as well as currency realignment.

The deputy finance ministers from 10 leading non-Communist industrial nations meet here today to put together an agenda for their ministers in talks beginning Friday.

The Canadian delegation which arrived here Wednesday night included not only Deputy Finance Minister S. S. Reisman, but also, unexpectedly, Deputy Trade Minister James Grandy.

Finance Minister E. J. Benson and Louis Raminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada, are expected later today.

Frigid Relief

EDMONTON (CP) — It was warming up today for Albertans who never had it so cold Wednesday.

The weather office said temperatures were heading for a relatively balmy zero, after plunging to record lows for Dec. 15 at eight locations.

The cold—it was 44 below at Edmonton international airport Wednesday night—slipped into Saskatchewan today, but the chief forecaster said the Arctic air mass had weakened and Saskatchewan would not get quite as frigid as Alberta.

At 7 a.m. it was 33 below at Prince Albert and Saskatoon, 22 below at Regina and 19 below at Moose Jaw.

Records for cold were shattered Wednesday at Fort Nelson, B.C., Edmonton international airport, Vermilion, Grande Prairie, Peace River, Fort Chipewyan and Whitecourt and equalled at Brooks and Red Deer.

Fort Nelson reported 47 below, the coldest day in December since the British Columbia community 475 miles northwest of Edmonton started keeping records in 1941. The previous December low was 46 below in 1951.

Few Flights Delayed

TORONTO (CP)—A work-to-rule campaign by Air Canada ground employees caused flight delays at Toronto International Airport today, but elsewhere across the country no major disruption was reported.

An Air Canada spokesman said there were long line-ups at Toronto ticket counters and flight delays were averaging 15 minutes. Part of the problem was attributed to a passenger backlog from a heavy rain and wind storm Wednesday.

Thirty-five of 100 flights were cancelled Wednesday at Toronto and schedules were also disrupted at Montreal because of the storm. One 747 jumbo jet from Miami was diverted to Toronto from Montreal because of ice and freezing rain.

Ulster Defeatism Irks Protestants

BELFAST (AP) — Anger and frustration were reported swelling among Northern Ireland's Protestant majority today over a British admission there is little hope of a complete military solution to the violence which has tormented Ulster for more than two years.

And as if to underscore the gloomy forecast, guerrilla gunmen early today severely wounded another British soldier on patrol in Belfast, adding to the two already in danger of losing their lives from gunfire Wednesday.

British Home Secretary Reginald Maudling, who holds cabinet responsibility for Northern Ireland, shocked Protestants Wednesday when he told reporters it was likely the terrorists "would not be defeated, not completely eliminated, but have their violence reduced to an acceptable level."

The battle being fought by 14,000 British troops against the Irish Republican Army is a hard one, he said, and there appears to be no limit "to the evil these men can do."

Maudling's statement, made after two days of intensive talks in Northern Ireland with army and government chiefs, drew a swift retort from Rev. Ian Paisley, a hardliner who speaks for a powerful body of Protestants.

He said no level of violence would be acceptable to the people of Northern Ireland.

They would be "even more frustrated by this public declaration that it is not the intention of the British government to absolutely win the battle against the IRA," he said.

Paisley demanded an emergency debate in the Northern Ireland Parliament over the issue, while fears rose that Maudling's admission could spark a violent Protestant reaction once its implications of never-ending strife struck home.

The IRA's bomb-and-bullet terror campaign, which has brought 197 violent deaths in 28 months, is aimed at bringing Northern Ireland under the rule of the Irish Republic. The North's one million Protestants —who outnumber Roman Catholics two to one— are implacably opposed to union with the overwhelmingly Catholic republic.

Census Does Double Take on Marijuana

OTTAWA (CP) — When the first farmer's census form listing marijuana as a cash crop came in, census officials smiled.

After several more, they began looking at one another with raised eyebrows.

Finally, the census bureau sent inspectors out to the fields and found the farmers were telling the truth—marijuana has become a major cash crop for some farmers, representing all age groups, in several provinces.

Because of census rules, officials cannot release any statistics or name the provinces.

More importantly—as far as the farmers are concerned—the officials can't pass on the names of marijuana-growers to the RCMP.

A Statistics Canada spokesman said today that statistics on the acreage devoted to marijuana and the crop's cash value will not be reported separately, but will be lumped in with "other crops" in figures to be released sometime after March.

If province-by-province figures for marijuana were given, the spokesman said, "by a process of deduction individuals could be identified."

By law, census officials cannot release information that could be tied to any one individual or company.

But they confirm that marijuana was the major source of income for some Canadian farmers last year. An ounce of the illegal substance can sell for as much as $20 on the retail level.

The acreage devoted to marijuana on a national basis is minuscule, but officials indicated it is larger than such pharmaceutical crops as digitalis, which comes from the foxglove plant.

When RCMP raids on seizures of several marijuana harvests were reported recently, Statistics Canada officials checked and—to their relief—found that "it wasn't any of ours."

Census officials couldn't help but be pleased at one aspect of the situation.

"Some of our employees were amazed at the degree of trust" given census-takers and the census bureau, one official said.

A spokesman for the taxation department heard the news with interest.

"We're not aware that any farmers have reported that they are deriving income from marijuana," the tax man said.

If the farmers involved did report their income from marijuana, they would be protected by law from having their return statements passed on to the police.
